University struggling with depleted budget

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A series of hard-hitting gubernatorial vetoes of funds slated for the University of Massachusetts will translate this semester into fewer class sections, a depleted financial aid reserve, and a slew of departmental cutbacks which may prolong the time it takes for students to graduate.

Gov. Michael Dukakis this summer vetoed an additional $8.1 million, which was originally appropriated by the state legislature for fiscal year 1990.

The veto comes on the heels of tuition and fee hikes which surfaced in fall semester bills and brings the University's total financial shortfall to $23.5 million since the first wave of cuts began two years ago.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said the veto is a major setback for the University, which had been making great strides in recent years to become one of the country's leading public institutions for higher learning.

"UMass-Amherst has been aspiring to offer students who come here for a quality education," Duffey said. "The momentum of recent years and the progress we've made has been brought to a halt."

The state also rejected the UMass Physical Plant's request for $12 million in capital outlay funds to insure the removal of all asbestos and PCB hazards in buildings all over campus, according to Peter Wozniak, director of the Physical Plant.

Handicap Accessibility projects, roof repairs, streamline repairs, and federally mandated water backflow devices also will not receive funding although the cost of repair will only increase as the problems will be left untreated, he said.

Duffey blamed the budget shortfall on "mismanagement and mistakes" by the state, and added that: "The University is being caught in the anger people feel toward state government."

"I regret the fact that tuition and fees have gone up but I don't think those are so unreasonable," he said. "What we've been seeing over the last three years is the state disinvesting in public higher educa-

Student Trustee plans strategy to battle cuts

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Student Trustee Eric Nakajima has a plan.

By the time state elections open in November, 1990, the student leader hopes to have public higher education listed as a high priority in legislative circles, alongside health care and local aid.

Gov. Michael Dukakis' veto this summer of $8.1 million from the University's budget has brought the school's total shortfall to $21.6 million for fiscal year 1990, despite an increase in tuition and fees.

Nakajima said if the Commonwealth continues its failure to appreciate the importance of public higher education, the University of Massachusetts may face a budget crisis again next year.

"People need to realize that an overwhelming number of graduates from public higher education stay in the state to work," Nakajima said. "When they work in the state, money flows back into the state from their taxes and the money they spend generates revenue."

Nakajima said there area too many voters in the state who do not realize this fact and resist tax hikes designed to supplement public higher education.

"I want to get people educated and energized about the budget problem, especially for an override vote," Nakajima said. "Most people don't care about how improving the betterment of future generations. They care more about what's in it for them."

Nakajima spent hours this summer gathering data and formulating these conclusions by talking to University and town officials, UMass faculty, and state legislators about the impact of the cuts.

He also read budget impact statements and studied past budgets to determine the full effect of the cuts and to formulate a means to prevent a second crisis in the future.

Nakajima plans to launch a statewide campaign to bolster support for public higher education at a noon rally scheduled for Sept. 11 in the Student Union Ballroom. He will deliver the keynote ad-

Community support puts UMass police in the saddle

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts, which has made headlines in recent years as a site of racial and political unrest, will activate a mounted police patrol this fall to rebuild community relations.

Two months ago, the University acquired two chestnut-colored horses, named Seba and "Finney" or Finnegan's Honor, from the Springfield Police Department, which was forced to disband its patrol to meet state budget cutbacks.

Although the University is embroiled in a similar budget crisis, an outpouring of community support and gifts totalling $70,000, has cleared the way for the program's implementation.

Scores of community donations, including a horse trailer, feed bags, and the free renovation of the police barn by local contractors, have allowed police to open a trust fund to insure the horses' care, which is expected to cost some $4,000 annually.

Neighboring police departments, as well as officers from Boston, Hartford, Conn., and New York also have offered the fledgling patrol advice and riding assistance.

"I've never seen this kind of support. People are coming out of the woodwork," said Dr. Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety.

But, he added, "Unless we can continue this spirit of volunteerism, we'll have no program.'

The UMass Mounted Police Patrol, which originated nearly 20 years ago but was abandoned because of lack of space, is returning as a facet of Dr. Hilson's Public Safety Educational Assistance and Community Enrichment (PEACE) Program.

"You've never seen a student pet a police car, but they will walk up and pet a horse," Hilson said.

Hilson conceded that police-student relations were badly damaged last spring when student demonstrators launched six separate building takeovers in protest of Department of Defense funded research at the University.

The new program, however, is neither a direct result of those events nor an effort to curtail future outbursts, he said.

Student leader electrocuted while camping

A falcon, a storm, or a great song.

These words, excerpts from a poem entitled "I Live My Life," were read at a memorial service held recently in memory of student leader Steve Gardescu, who died July 27 when he was electrocuted by lightning while camping in Wendell State Forest.

Gardescu, 23, would have been a senior at the University of Massachusetts this fall. His loved ones say he is remembered for his vibrant personality and powerful sense of community: characteristics which propelled him to the forefront of several student groups.

Gardescu was a resident of State Street in Northampton, where he was employed at State Street Fruit Store.

Most recently, Gardescu, who is noted for his ability to "turn things around," was elected treasurer of the faltering Commuter Area Government last spring.

He also served as co-president of the UMass Bicycle Co-op, where he led an improvement campaign to computerize the group's records and update equipment.

Katja Hahn D'Errico, coordinator of student businesses on campus, described Gardescu, a devout Quaker, as a "very adventurous" person with a well-balanced sense of values.

"His values determined how he lived, really," D'Errico said. "Community was very important to him. If you had conflicts with Steve, they were always able to be resolved."

Gardescu's success in student activities also includes Earthfoods, a cafeteria-style restaurant run entirely by students. He harbored an innate ability to fix things, and saved the restaurant several hundred dollars when he repaired its ice machine.

"He was one of the most amazing people who could fix everything," said his close friend and former member of the bike coop, Brad Powell.

"It wasn't the money," Powell said. "He wanted to go where the help was needed."

"He listened well and could help find similarities in what people wanted," he said. "There's a lot of people who are going to be hit hard by his death. A real absence will be felt."

issue of crowd control," Hilson said. "They are here for the public relations factor."

The state's ongoing budget turmoil did not allow the University to fund the riding instruction program held this summer at Tillson Farm, but the 20 participating police officers readily volunteered more than 180 unpaid hours for the sessions.

"This has done wonders for their morale," Hilson said. "These horses have given them a new lease on life."

The officers will wear police uniforms that are specially tailored for riding and are expected to patrol the campus daily to increase visibility, Hilson said.

"I think the police are not held in the highest esteem," he said. "I want to try and override that sense of distrust."

As the program progresses, patrols will be continued into the evening hours and extended to isolated areas on campus to increase campus safety, he said.

Home base for Jewish studies opens

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Jewish students at the University of Massachusetts now have a place they can call home.

The Jewish Living Community, located at the former site of the Beta Kappa Phi (BKO) fraternity on North Pleasant St., beginning this semester will house 26 Jewish students or other students interested in the Jewish culture.

It features a fully-equipped kitchen and several lounges, as well as facilities for lectures, symposia and conferences, said Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, director of Hillel, the center for Jewish students.

> "The house will make Jewish students more visible on campus."
> – Scott Farber

Perlmutter, who has been involved in the project since its inception in 1985, said the buidling, which is considered to be off-campus, is open to Five College students of all denominations "who want to live in a Jewish atmosphere and [do] Jewish things during the year."

Planned activities include religious services, films, and parties, he said, adding that he is now taking applications for students who are interested in living in the community residence hall.

Scott Farber, former chairman of Hillel's social/cultural committee, said the house would provide a home-like atmosphere for Jewish students on campus.

"Jewish students have a home base to go to. It makes a world of difference [for them]," Farber said. "The house will make Jewish students more visible on campus."

The community residence, which sits in the heart of the Greek sorority/fraternity area, has been received favorably by its neighbors, Perlmutter said.

"They've been very positive and welcoming," he said.

Perlmutter said the building will also house the Center for Jewish Studies, a branch of the UMass Judaic Studies department.

A library, an apartment for scholars-in-residence and a facility for religious services are part of the center, which he said would open when funding is available.

There are plans to move Hillel to the community from its office in the Student Union, however, Perlmutter said the move will not take place this year because the group does not own the building.

"When we're able to purchase it and outfit the offices, we hope to move," he said.

As for the Center for Jewish Studies, Perlmutter said the rental arrangements are still under discussion.

"First Week" welcomes UMass students to campus

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Hot air balloon rides, a scavenger hunt, and more than $5,000 worth of prizes are among the highlights of this year's "First Week" event, an annual celebration held to welcome new and returning students to campus.

The event, which is sponsored by the Commuter Area Government, began Sunday and is scheduled to end Friday night with a five-hour concert featuring rap, alternative rock, and heavy metal music.

Acting CAG President and First Week organizer Clarinda Rose-Turner said the event is expected to draw hundreds of University of Massachusetts students to participate in the back-to-school celebration.

"We're going to have a diverse bunch of [activities] — much more than in the past," she said.

Rose-Turner raised more than $5000 in gifts and prizes for the event through donations from some 120 area businesses. Prizes include a $200 phone from AT & T and a $200 gift certificate from Beardsley's Restaurant.

"[The businesses] are very grateful to have the students back," she said.

Events are ongoing tonight beginning at 5,7, 9 and 11 p.m. with a showing of the box-office smash: "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?" in the Campus Center Auditorium. Admission will be $1.50 for the first show and $2.50 for the evening features.

A scavenger hunt is scheduled from 7 to 11 p.m., beginning in Campus Center room 162. Door prizes will be given out during the event.

Thursday marks the kickoff of First Week Field day, which features hot air balloon rides, a caricature artist, tarot card reading, T-shirt printing, jugglers, and free raffles.

From 3 to 5 p.m., the Arts Council will hold a reception for the new Civility Mural located at the Flagstone Terrace in the Campus Center.

Also scheduled for the afternoon is a concert by local acoustic vocalists Kim Zombik and Dee Herrera with guitarist Ralph Seaman. Following by the film is a free showing of the movie "Moonstruck," starring Cher.

The final events will begin Friday afternoon from 3 to 5 p.m. with a coffee social sponsored by the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance in Campus Center room 803.

First Week will culminate Friday with an eclectic rock concert in the Campus Center's Bluewall from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. The concert features three Boston bands: Savage Garden, a heavy metal band, Chucklehead, a rap group, and Meta Terra, an alternative rock group.

CHOO-CHOO- The new Amtrak station on Railroad Street in Amherst opened July 18. Service is being offered to Washington D.C. and Montreal and all major points in between. Tickets are available at local travel agents, as well as on the train. Night owls will be pleased with the 1 a.m. departure time for our nation's capitol.

Amtrak hits Amherst

Students to climb aboard officials say

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

For the first time in 30 years, Amherst residents need look no further than their own town to take advantage of a full-scale passenger train service.

An unstaffed Amtrak train station, activated this summer on Railroad St., has turned the once-dormant railway into an active depot, transporting scores of people to destinations such as Montreal and Washington D.C.

For a substantial amount less than what it costs to travel by air, passengers can commute north or south and enjoy service to any of the major cities along the 721-mile route, including Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore, Newark, NJ., and New Haven, Conn., said Amtrak officials.

The Amherst station will remain unstaffed according to Cliff Black, Amtrak's director of public affairs. However, people can purchase tickets from area travel agencies or right on the train when seats are available, he said.

"Since the station opened, Amherst has proved to be one of our biggest producers," he said.

"We're expecting a lot of business," Black said. "Trains have been rediscovered, especially by college students."

Both the north and southbound trains run on a daily basis, however, the late night departure times: 2:25 a.m. and 1:05 a.m. respectively, may be inconvenient for some travelers.

"It's definitely beneficial, although I don't know about the times. One in the morning is a bit late," said Anne Campney, a secretary for the Amherst Chamber of Commerce.

Twilight departures aside, local travel agents are predicting strong ticket sales to students in the Five-College area. Some agencies have already sold out all seats to Montreal for Columbus Day weekend, Oct. 6 to 9.

"A lot of students will buy tickets for the long weekends," said Nikki Geyster of Campus Travel. "Roundtrip fares to Montreal start at $66. It's cheap, and you can sleep on the way."

Minority enrollment increasing

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

Minority enrollment at the University of Massachusetts, aided by an extensive recruiting drive, has increased by 14 percent this year, according to the Admissions Office.

The 3,850-member incoming freshman class, will consist of about 10.5 percent or some 417 minority students, an increase of about 50 students since 1988.

The minority student population, which excludes exchange students or those who live abroad, includes Black, Hispanic, Asian, Cape Verdean and Native Americans.

Dr. Juan Caban, associate director of undergraduate admissions, said a minority open house, a phone-a-thon, special mailings and paying for a portion of visiting minority students' travel expenses were all a part of the recruiting drive.

"A lot of work went into it," said Caban. "But it paid off."

Caban said a major concern of minority applicants is the racial climate on campus. He said the allegedly racially-motivated brawl in 1986, following the final game of the World Series which pitted the Boston Red Sox and the New York Mets, and last year's highly-publicized protests against racism on campus caused a decline in Black student enrollment. This year, however, it will increase by 16 percent.

"The (1988) protests proved to be positive," said Caban. "It showed that the University environment is one that will not tolerate racism."

A minority student enrollment of 20 percent per incoming freshman class is currently the University's goal, Caban said.

The goal is realistic, because the number of minority 18-year-old in the country is increasing, Caban said.

Various minority student support programs help bolster minority enrollment, Caban said. The Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), and the Minority Engineering Program (MEP), are the most active, he said.

Commuters still without a leader

Off-campus residents are still without a president this fall, as the controversy over last spring's election of Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes as co-presidents of the Commuter Area Government continues.

The government is also without a treasurer due to the tragic death of student leader Steve Gardescu this summer.

The controversy began last spring when Reilly and Zarganes defeated co-candidates Robb Smith, former CAG vice president and former student Senator Ted Chambers, to win the post.

The Smith/Chambers camp immediately contested the election, claiming to have discovered several inconsistencies in voting procedures, including votes cast by those who may not have been registered students.

Acting President Clarinda Rose-Turner, who was elected vice president last spring, will assume responsibility for the office until the Student Judiciary rules on the case.

Elections to fill the treasurer's position will be scheduled in upcoming weeks, she added.

Housing services launches recycling campaign in dorms

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Housing Services will launch a massive newspaper recycling effort this month, targeting residence halls across campus as its source.

Sherill Baldwin, co-chair of the University Recyclers, a student group, will coordinate the program, which begins Sept. 11 and will involve donations from all residence halls.

"If we have a 60 percent recovery rate, that's nine tons of paper a week," she said. "That's incredible. We could save a forest in one year."

Effort on the part of the students living in the halls will be minimal, she said.

A box labeled "Newspaper" will be placed in a target area on the floor, such as the bathroom. Students who have excess newspapers need only place them in two paper bags for volunteers to pick up.

"If you recycle a Collegian every day for a semester, you would easily save a tree," she said. "You can't say that about many environmental causes."

About 15 students who have experience in recycling programs or view themselves as "recycling activists" will be receive credit through the School of Education for making weekly visits to residence halls to pick up the newspapers, she said.

Paid work study students will, in turn, transport the newspapers to National Fiber, where it will be recycled into insulation material, Baldwin said.

Baldwin said the recycling effort is necessary to comply with a town of Amherst ordinance which prohibits the regular disposal of newspapers.

"Paper in a landfill is a public hazard," she said. "We are a part of Amherst and nobody is supposed to be throwing newspaper away."

The benefits of recycling range from saving trees and energy to deferring tax increases by reducing the workload of municipal employees, Baldwin said.

"Some students have been waiting for this because it should be fairly simple for everyone involved," Baldwin said. "When you think of a lot of environmental causes and issues, recycling is a good way to bring direct aid to the environment."

Glossy paper, magazines, advertising inserts and phone books will not be accepted, Baldwin said.

For more information about the recycling program or the practicum, call 545-1960.

Research issue examined

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

As a result of last spring's demonstrations against Department of Defense funded research at the University of Massachusetts, the Faculty Senate has established an ad hoc committee on Current Research Issues.

The 20-person committee, consisting of 12 faculty members and eight students, held its first meeting three weeks ago.

Eleven members attended the meeting and discussed overall objectives for the group, members said.

The committee's charge is to examine the various types of research undertaken at the University and recommend ways to help the campus community educate itself on research and the research policy. The committee will also attempt to develop proposals to encourage research with socially beneficial consequences.

"Our first task is deciding what's acceptable research activity for a university," said sociology Professor Peter Rossi, a committee member.

The committee should not concentrate on present University research because that would lead to judging what has been done in the past rather than concentrating on what should be done in the future, Rossi said.

Socially beneficial research looks at "how to achieve peace, a safe environment and equality in our society and others," he said. "A university that doesn't continually consider these issues is a dead one. And we're not dead."

Professor Ronald Archer, a chemistry professor who is also serving on the committee said, "I hope we're able to give a satisfactory report to the Faculty Senate. The University already has guidelines on research," he said. "Our job is to decide whether to stay with the present guidelines or to alter them."

Parking scarce, costly in Amherst

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

A townwide crackdown on parking meter violators coupled with a reduction of available spaces in Amherst center will mean higher parking fees and traffic fines this fall, according to Amherst Town Manager Barry Del Castilho.

Not only will the cost of using a parking meter and the penalty for parking infractions be more expensive, but there will also be fewer free parking spaces available, he said.

Most of the parking lot behind the CVS Pharmacy, North Pleasant St., is town-owned. Del Castilho said Amherst will rent some 60 spaces to car owners for $30 a month.

A small portion of the lot will remain unmetered and available to patrons of CVS, he said.

The meter fee hike is designed to increase the parking space turnover rate by discouraging drivers from usurping space, he said.

"The whole idea is to make parking spaces available ... for people to run errands," Del Castilho said.

The increase is also expected to generate much-needed revenue for the town and gather funds needed to maintain the meters, he said.

Those who violate Amherst traffic and miscellaneous parking ordinances will face stringent penalties and an increase in ticket distribution, he said.

"We are not counting on an increase in receipts," he said. "We want to be sure that people are not parking [in the free parking spaces] all day long."

A two-day, two-hour workshop series, conducted by the Program Director of the Arts Council, on arts programming and grantwriting, will be held on Sept. 13 and 18 and October 4 and 11 from 3-5pm. Free; registration required. For further info contact the Arts Council.

PUBLIC ART
The Arts Council is actively involved in expanding the public art collection at UMass. The Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library, an exhibition space for UMass faculty and students, will host a closing reception for the summer exhibition of works by Karen Dolmanisth on Wednesday, September 20 from 4-6pm and an opening reception for the fall exhibition on Wednesday, September 27 from 4-6pm. Rain dates Thursdays, September 21 and 28. The Council commissioned a graduate student, now alumnus, and a distinguished Massachusetts-based artist to redesign the Student Union Plaza and has recently, with the assistance of two grants from the National Endowment for the Arts commissioned a renowned landscape architect and artist to redesign Metawampe Lawn. A memorial to UMass' first sitting president, William Smith Clark, was designed by a student and is in the final design stages. This past year students in the Art and Landscape Architecture departments participated in a competition to design a commemorative garden to Helen Curtis Cole, the University's first and only Dean of Women, who served from the mid-1940s to the early-1970s. The garden is proposed for a site between Old Chapel and Goodell Building.

The Civility Mural, designed and created by graduate art student Jonathan Kohrman, was initiated last year by environmental design student Jon Satz. The Council managed the project in cooperation with the Graduate Art Students Association and UARTS; the project was funded by Provost Richard D. O'Brien, the Arts Council, the Art Department, and GASA. Technical assistance was provided by the Physical Plant Department. A reception to celebrate its completion will take place on Thursday, Sept. 7 from 3-5pm at the Flagstone Terrace, Campus Center. Refreshments and music! Rain date: Sept. 8.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Locals ponder future of abortion rights for women in Massachusetts

By KATERI WALSH
Collegian Staff

As summer approached and students in the Amherst area dispersed for various destinations, the U.S. Supreme Court, then under intense scrutiny, prepared to render a historical decision in the much publicized abortion case, Missouri vs. Reproductive Health Services.

The decision, handed down July 3, provided states with new authority to restrict a woman's right to have an abortion but stopped short of reversing its 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision which legalized abortion.

Local reaction, though tempered by the lack of students in the area, was nevertheless swift, according to Marlene G. Fried, of the Abortion Rights Action Fund.

In the days following the court's decision, demonstrators held a protest on the Coolidge Bridge leading to Northampton, and a noon rally on Amherst Common, which drew some 200 people, Fried said.

"What was clear from the reaction was that young women especially are outraged at this attempt to curtail their rights," Fried said, adding that this "involvement and participation will only intensify."

Increased involvment is also expected on the opposite front, however, said Lianne Azevedo, of the anti-abortion group, Women Exploited By Abortion [WEBA].

"All the polls say that the majority [of the people] are for life," Azevedo said. "I think there is a lot of hope and we're going to see a lot more people involved."

Hailing the court's decision as a long overdue victory for the pro-life cause, Azevedo said: "The decision was as good if not better than Roe vs. Wade being overturned, because [we feel] their decision was that life begins at conception."

The immediate effects will be felt only in Missouri, because the court's decision upheld the state's law which bans abortions in public hospitals and clinics and requires doctors to perform expensive tests for fetal viability.

Barbara Blodgett, of the Abortion Rights Action Fund, and formerly the associate pastor at the First Congregational Church of Amherst, said the Massachusetts laws do not appear to be in danger yet.

"From what I understand, the state Senate is pro-choice by a small margin and so is the House," she said. "The important thing is to maintain people in the legislature that are pro-choice" by careful examination of any new candidates, Blodgett said.

But Fried said: "The state Supreme Court can no more be counted on to protect women's reproductive rights than the national one."

With attention to the abortion issue having steadily increased in recent years, Massachusetts has emerged as a major battle ground between pro-choice and pro-life activists.

The implications of the Missouri case were considered relatively narrow because the law being challenged did not restrict early abortions in private doctors' offices and clinics. However, according to community leaders, three cases currently pending may have broader implications.

Two of these cases could get right to the heart of Roe vs. Wade, by addressing the rights of teenagers to obtain abortions at any stage of pregnancy.

Amherst Regional High School Principal Eilene Levitt said this issue has been of particular concern to students and faculty at the school in recent months.

"Certainly students are going to want to discuss [abortion] in social studies and health classes," she said. "There will definitely be attention given to the subject."

Fall brings hope to EWC

Center is recovering despite budget cuts

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

After a debilitating year of budget cuts, hiring freezes, and program cancellations, the Everywoman's Center, bolstered by a major outreach effort, a new counseling coordinator and a new advisory board, has a new future.

"The advisory board has potential, and we have a full-fledged counseling program this semester," said Carol Wallace, director of the Everywoman's Center, which is housed in Wilder Hall.

Last year, the campus-wide hiring freeze, which is still ongoing, forced the center to discontinue counseling services and refer women to University Health Services and other crisis centers in the area.

Several months ago, however, the University allowed EWC to hire Susan Mahler to take over the counseling coordinator position so the program would be fully staffed.

The new advisory board, which consists of many prominent women leaders in the Five College area, will help EWC with public relations and its mission of promoting educational access and outreach for women in higher education.

"It could be a very powerful board," Wallace said. "I hope our outreach and involvement will generate interest in faculty and staff members as well as the students."

New women students will receive a brochure introducing them to EWC programs and employment opportunities, Wallace said, adding that the brochure is one facet of the center's outreach effort.

"We're trying to generate more interest not only in the center's programming, [but] also in our development and employment opportunities," she said.

Stacy Roth, program coordinator for Against Violence Against Women (AVAW) education and advocacy program, said she has high hopes for the EWC this year.

"I feel that the center will grow," she said. "We're very unique in that, from the beginning, the center chose to prioritize education."

However, even though the center is continuing its programming and services, no one is denying the fact that EWC is still recovering from severe blows to its budget over the last several years.

"The center's programs have become increasingly campus-focused," Wallace said. "Our big loss is not being able to provide educational access to women in the community."

Last year, the University eliminated the Women's Admission and General Education Support program (WAGES), which was primarily a service for community women.

The program's staff worked with low income and older women to provide counseling for admissions, housing, day care, financial aid, and academics.

"[The budget] is pretty tight right now . . . but I'm very optimistic," Wallace said. "I see us doing everything we can to protect the programs we still have."

In an effort to increase volunteer staff and community support, the coordinators of the Educator/Advocate (E/A) and Counselor/Advocate (C/A) programs will begin training volunteers at the beginning of this semester.

Both programs deal with issues concerning violence against women, including rape, battering, incest, pornography, sexual harassment, and media imaging.

Roth said the AVAW, E/A and C/A programs are essential because there is a general denial of the importance of women's issues on college campuses.

"What is unfortunate is that many students believe they're part of a sheltered community, and deny that these things happen — but they do," she said.

Cooley Dickinson purchase helps battle breast cancer

By JOHN PATRICK MUSULIN
Collegian Correspondent

Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton has acquired a second mammography machine, an addition hospital officials hope will be a major advance in the area's battle against breast cancer.

According to the American Cancer Society, breast cancer will strike one out of every ten American women. In 1989 alone, it is expected to kill over 41,000 women in this country.

Cooley Dickinson, which also recently received its three-year accreditation from the American College of Radiology, is the fourth hospital in the state to receive an accredition in mammography, the x-ray examination of the breast.

Mammography is considered by many doctors to be the best method available for the early detection of breast cancer because the x-rays are able to detect cancerous lumps too small to be felt by the hand.

Dr. Richard Humphreys, chief of radiology at Cooley Dickinson, said: "These two advances ... place Cooley Dickinson at the forefront of diagnosing women for breast cancer."

Breast cancer, which primarily affects women, is not preventable at this time, however, if it is detected early and treatment is immediate, chances for survival are good, according to documents from ACS.

People who are at high risk for breast cancer are those whose close family members have had cancer, women who reach menopause at a late age or begin menstruation before age 12.

Also at risk are those who are obese (40 percent above normal weight) and women who give birth after age 30.

The ACS said the highest percentage of breast cancer cases occur in older women. Because of this, it is suggested that women have a baseline mammogram at age 35, and periodically therafter.

A mammogram may cause the patient some discomfort, however, if administered correctly, it should not cause acute pain, the ACS said.

Also, technological advances have decreased the amount of radiation needed for high quality mammograms so patients will not be subjected to unreasonable doses of x-rays.

In addition to the appropriate mammography treatment, the ACS recommends that women receive a clinical breast exam as part of their regular health examination.

This includes a visual inspection of the breasts by a physician, who will note any changes in size, shape or skin dimpling. It should also involve a complete examination of the breasts, chest, and armpits for lumps.

The ACS also strongly recommends that all women over the age of 20 perform monthly self breast examinations.

A pamphlet published by ACS, entitled, "Special Touch: a Personal Plan of Action for Breast Health," gives general information on breast cancer and instructions for self-examinations.

For further information, the Cooley Dickinson Hospital Auxiliary offers TEL-MED, a cassette tape library of free health information which features tapes on breast cancer, surgery and self-examination.

Those interested may call 586-5800 and request a specific tape: Breast Cancer, tape 6; Breast (Mammography) Exam, tape H210; and Breast Surgery, tape H25.

In addition, the radiology department will soon have a room specially designed for showing videotapes which offer general information on breast cancer and instructions for performing self-examinations.

Bradley C. Bauler, director of development and community relations for Cooley Dickinson, said the recent improvements were made possible by fundraisers by the hospital's Auxiliary staff.

An additional $20,000 is still needed to complete the project, he said, adding that the Auxiliary is planning to contact various women's organizations in the area to solicit charitiable gifts to meet the financial needs of the project.

Grant for cancer research will aid prof's study of viral diseases

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Dr. Leonard Norkin, professor of Microbiology at the University of Massachusetts, will probably not find the cure for the common cold, cancer, or Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS).

However, with the help of a $115,669 grant awarded to the University from the National Cancer Institute, Norkin said he intends to better understand and perhaps find a cure for these viral diseases.

"Part of the reason we [researchers] do this is to understand the various stages of the life cycle of a virus," Norkin said. "In doing so, we might stumble on something that will help researchers intervene in the infectious process."

Norkin said he and his research assistant, Walter Atwood, a graduate student at the University, recently stumbled upon what may be the key to determining what causes viruses in human beings.

While researching the Simian Virus (SV40), a virus that causes tumors in laboratory animals, the pair discovered a "window" for a virus to enter a cell.

When a virus infects a host, it attempts to increase its longevity by fooling the host into thinking the virus isn't there, Norkin said.

Norkin, who has researched the Simian Virus since he began teaching at the University in 1972, said the SV40 uses the protein molecule HLA as a window, or receptor, to slip into the cell without being detected.

HLA, which usually alerts the immune system of the virus' presence, appears to disappear when a host is infected by the Simian Virus, he said.

Norkin said he is fascinated by this discovery, because the cell's surface molecule, which triggers the immune system, is the same molecule which the virus is using as its "window" to enter and infect the cell.

This intricate and yet unexplained mechanism will be a prime target of Norkin's investigation, which is expected to continue over the next several months.

By further characterizing the interaction of a virus with its receptor, Norkin said he hopes to bring researchers closer to a cure for the common cold, cancer, and AIDS. Norkin said that he wants to determine whether it is chance these three unrelated viral diseases all use related proteins to enter cells.

Chinese Democracy Fund raises money to aid Tianamen Square victims

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

A group of Chinese students and faculty at the University of Massachusetts have raised more than $25,000 over the past five months in an effort to help people in China recover from the Tianamen Square massacre last June.

The students opened the Chinese Democracy Fund in the UMass Credit Union last May and are attempting to channel funds to those people and their families involved in the now defunct pro-democracy movement.

The fund, operated by graduate students Fang Yi, Huang Guyang, Liu Jun, Su Wuizhou and Zhu Zhengrong, has received widespread support from students, faculty and staff.

"We discussed the situation in China and decided we should all contribute something to help," said Fang, a doctoral candidate in mathematics.

"The money is used for saving people's lives and for the families of the dead," Fang said. "Many people died and left families, many were wounded and many are in hiding. We want to help them and their families."

Last spring, Chancellor Joseph Duffey donated a room in the University-owned Wysocki House on North Pleasant St. to serve as the headquarters for the fundraising operation.

The room is fully-equipped with telephones and copy and facsimile machines to aid volunteers in soliciting charitable donations.

The Chinese Democracy Fund was formally established on May 4 at the second meeting of the Chinese students. At that time, money in the credit union totalled about $1,200.

When action in China intensified and the Tianamen Square protesers began the hunger strike in May, members of the Chinese Democracy Fund went public with their efforts.

They launched a massive fundraising campaign, soliciting donations from a table on the Campus Center concourse and outside of local supermarkets.

By the middle of August, donations totalled $12,923.52.

The fund also sponsored a Chinese fair on June 10 using space donated by the Northampton Center for the Arts.

The fair featured a wide assortment of Chinese food, all donated from restaurants in the area and a spectacular array of Chinese arts and crafts, some of which were the work of UMass professors, Fang said.

Although the group incurred some $2,450 in organizational expenses, it was far outweighed by an outpouring of community support.

Revenue from the fair totalled $12,285.02.

Raising revenue for the victims was easy compared to delivering the funds, Fang said. A little more than $5,000 has been sent to China.

"We have to be very careful when money is transferred to China," Fang said. "If the Chinese government finds out, both we and the people we are trying to help are in danger. The government in China calls us oveseas counterrevolutionaries."

Fang said he is confident the money has reached the right people in China.

Fundraising events will continue this semester. He hopes a UMass student who witnessed the whole massacre will speak and show pictures of the ordeal.

Huyang said a second account may be opened in the credit union, which will be used for lobbying activities in Washington D.C. and on the state level.

Reform bill: stay in school

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

An educational reform bill designed to help potential high school dropouts graduate and seek a college education is now pending in the Massachusetts state senate.

The bill was overwhelmingly approved in late July by the House of Representatives.

State Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst), who sponsored the bill, said the Massachusetts high school dropout rate is nine percent, three percent higher than the national average.

This could lead to serious problems for the future of the Commonwealth due to the declining proportion of young people in the state, Rosenberg said.

As a result, Massachusetts will need the maximum number of educated and trained people to satisfy the job market, he said.

"It could have a very dramatic effect," he said. "There will be many jobs begging for qualified people."

Rosenberg said there is also a need to encourage recent dropouts to return to high school and complete their education.

If enacted, the bill would create community-based, public-private partnerships to aid the students by tapping non-government sources for funds and using university students as tutors for the students. Social service agencies would offer counselling and other support for them.

"My hope is to get universities, businesses and human service agencies working together," said Rosenberg. "If the students are able to go on to college, we want to help."

Rosenberg said that money would need to be freed up from an existing pool of state funds to finance the program.

He said the bill is the result of a lobbying effort by a coalition of University of Massachusetts and Amherst College students, all of whom are members of MASSPirg.

Evaporated funds insure a dry semester at UMass tion."

The University will enroll some 1,800 fewer students during the next two years to meet the cutbacks. But this abatement will not mean greater individual attention for students or smaller class sizes.

It is a downslide sparked by the planned reduction of 24 faculty members, 360 part-time faculty and teaching assistants, and 200 administrative support staff.

The loss already has forced the cancellation of 957 class sections scheduled for this semester. More cancellations are expected because of an ongoing hiring freeze which bans departments from filling positions vacated during the year.

"The state is about to pay a very serious price for neglecting this investment," Duffey said. "The future is very uncertain. We're trying to keep our priorities straight."

This gradual depletion of staff will reduce the availability of services in University Admissions, Financial Aid, and Career Placement departments.

The Financial Aid office, which serves some 15,000 students, lost approximately $100,000 in direct student aid under the vetoes, said Director Dr. Arthur Jackson.

Jackson said the state Scholarship Program, a separate student aid effort, lost $3 million in funds to the cuts. He added that the loss is expected to impact UMass student aid in upcoming semesters.

The professional assistance offered by the office for non-work study job placement, coping with increasing tuition and fees, and numerous other services is expected to be greatly reduced, he said.

The University library has also suffered a severe budget curtailment totalling $1.5 million from fiscal year 1988.

The cutbacks have crippled its acquisition budget, resulting in a loss of 2,000 current subscriptions to scientific and scholarly journals, a reduction of more than 13,000 standard monographs, and 9,000 volumes of research and backfiles.

Also decreased or placed on hold were equipment and facilities for research initiatives, renovation projects, various supplies, maintenance of buildings and grounds, and telephone and mail services for departments.

Nakajima rallies for an improved fiscal future dress, outlining the impact of the cuts on students, faculty and the overall quality of the University.

Nakajima invited state Sen. John Olver, (D-Amherst), state Rep. Stan Rosenberg, (D-Amherst), and Chancellor Joseph Duffey to speak at the rally. All have indicated they plan to attend, he said.

It is important to determine before the rally if Rosenberg plans to endorse an override of Proposition 2-1/2, he said. An override will allow the municipalities to increase property taxes, which would increase revenues for cities and towns.

"If Rosenberg favors an override, the rally will be a springboard for a major rally in Boston," Nakajima said.

Should the override vote succeed, it would free up $18 million for state public higher education, he said. About $8 million would be reserved for the University.

"If [Rosenberg] doesn't go for an override, we must turn in peoples' minds their impression of UMass," he said, citing plans for a massive letter and editorial writing campaign.

Nakajima said he is hoping to generate enough backing at the rally to form a budget committee composed of students who will network with faculty to gather departmental information about faculty and class cuts.

Volunteers will use the resulting data in correspondence with legislators and in editorials, he said.

"The purpose of the committee is two-fold," he said. "First, they will gather information. Second, they will use the information to educate the University and mobilize statewide into a strategic lobby campaign."

Even if an override is not an alternative, Nakajima said he has a strategy which may prevent the University from getting caught in the same financial crisis next year.

The Budget Committee will continue to lobby for state higher education, he said.

"I'm months ahead of the game," he said. "We are already thinking about the fiscal 91 cycle. We will do everything possible to make sure we don't get caught in the cycle again."

Library fights cuts to keep reputation Hours shortened to maintain services

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts library system is continuing its uphill battle to remain a major research facility despite a $1.5 million budget cut resulting in major reductions in acquisitions and shorter library hours this fall.

The University Library, which is comprised of the Main (Tower) Library, the Biological Sciences Library, the Physical Sciences Library and the Music Library, will suffer reductions of 2,000 periodical subscriptions, 13,000 standard monographs and 9,000 volumes of research.

> ' I'm an eternal optimist. I've been through the cutbacks before, so it doesn't hit me so hard. '
> Betty Brace

Also, this semester's Main Library hours will be shortened by at least one hour a day, with closing time on weekdays now posted at 11 p.m., according to Betty Brace, head of circulation and reserves.

The Physical Sciences Library's hours will be shortened more severely but its schedule is yet undetermined, she said. The library was closed on weekends this summer.

Brace said the libraries will are cutting their hours so they will be able to maintain a full support staff to help students locate books and other materials.

"We are reducing our hours so we can maintain a good level of service during the hours we're operating," Brace said.

Richard Talbot, director of the University Library, said 11 staff positions will be eliminated this year. However, he added that student library positions, half of which are work-study, will be "marginally" increased.

The state ranks last in the nation in library spending per capita student. Talbot said this deficiency is reflected in the University Library, which is ranked well below average on a list of major American research libraries.

"This year we'll be three-fourths of the way down the list," he said.

Library administrators have attempted to fairly distribute the cuts to each department so one area of study will not suffer more than another, he said.

"We've tried to cut it evenly across the board," he said.

Talbot said the underfunding exists because public libraries n Massachusetts are given low priority by state legislators and the Board of Regents, which decides two-thirds of the Library's acquisition budget.

"I'm discouraged at this downturn in the situation," Talbot said. "We should be able to compete with libraries at campuses of similar size."

However, Talbot said last semester's student-organized letter-writing campaign which lobbed state legislators for funds helped cushion the blow to the University's budget.

"Lots of students wrote the legislature," he said. "That's why we weren't cut more than we were."

He urged students to continue this lobbying effort so they will not be alumni of a University with a mediocre reputation.

"People's reputations are tied to the university they graduated from," Talbot said.

Brace, a UMass graduate, expressed optimism for the University's future.

"I'm an eternal optimist," Brace said. "I've been through [the cutbacks] before, so it doesn't hit me so hard."

Asbestos, PCB to remain on campus Removal deadline will not be met

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The state's rejection of more than $12 million in capital outlay requests by the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant will defer efforts to remove asbestos and PCB hazards, suspected causes of lung cancer.

Peter Wozniak, director of the Physical Plant, said asbestos, a substance used in floor tiles, insulation, and other building materials, is only dangerous when airborne.

However, he added, if it is not properly contained it poses a health risk to people using buildings all over campus.

"Almost every building on campus has asbestos in one form or another," he said. "Even with half of that money, we would only have removed a small portion of it."

Polychlorinated Biphenyls, or PCB, a liquid used in transformers which supply electricity to buildings, is extremely hazardous if exposed to fire or an explosion, both of which Wozniak said are rare and have never occured at the University.

The Environmental Protection Agency has mandated that all PCB hazards be removed from buildings by 1990, however Wozniak said the $12 million cutback will not allow UMass to meet this deadline.

"If they leak and get into the water or food chain, there will be a problem," he said, pointing out that this occurence is highly unlikely.

The shortfall will curtail handicapped accessibility projects mandated by the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, and halt plans for roof repairs, utility work, steamline repairs, and federally-mandated water backflow devices.

> ' Almost every building on campus has asbestos in one form or another. '
> Peter Wozniak

Wozniak cited an uncontrolled steamline near Fernald Hall, which is releasing precious energy instead of channeling the steam to its intended site.

"These aren't cosmetic (repairs)," he said. "You risk a major steam failure with a leak that size. It's wasting money."

University under siege; students, faculty, staff cope with budget crisis

Financial aid cuts may block graduation path

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

A combination of budget reductions and an 8-percent tuition hike at the University of Massachusetts is placing a formidable obstacle in the paths of students who need financial aid to complete their college education, the financial aid director said.

Dr. Arthur Jackson, financial aid director, said the budget crisis is the most "difficult financial situation" the University has suffered in more than a decade.

The cutbacks have forced a hiring freeze in administrative and support staff, he said, adding that the 15,000 students served by the office will not receive the same quality of assistance offered before the cuts.

"In the 12 years I have been here, this is the most difficult financial situation this office has had to deal with," Jackson said. "I think we are adapting as well as can be expected."

Because of the fiscal crisis, assistance with job placement or coping with the tuition hike will be less effective, but Jackson said the staff will make every effort to counter the slowdown.

"We are counseling students diligently," he said. "There are still options available, but they're not as substantive as they were five years ago."

Gov. Michael Dukakis vetoed some $100,000 in direct financial aid this summer that was to be channeled directly to UMass students, but Jackson said this loss is a small fraction of the rapidly depleting aid reserve.

The state Scholarship Fund, which serves colleges and universities across Massachusetts, lost $600,000 under an absolute veto by Dukakis.

The remaining $3.24 million in the reserve is being witheld until adequate revenue can be generated to replenish the fund, said Student Trustee, Eric Nakajima.

Nakajima said the reductions, which are forcing the University to turn away freshmen and transfer students, are blocking public access to an affordable education.

"There are people getting locked out of the system of higher public education," he said.

Students originating from poorer areas in the state are not receiving the financial aid they need and are forced to seek elsewhere for a college education.

However, he added regretfully, in some cases, these potential students are turned away because funding is not available.

"It's a trickle-down effect," he said. "Students who can't afford private institutions are coming here, pushing out [others] to community colleges.

Those who are left "are being cut out of the system," he added.

Jackson said although the number of applications for financial aid has increased since 1986, the number of students who demonstrate a need but fail to receive aid has risen as well.

The cuts will have little effect on students who have work study jobs on campus, because all but 10-percent of the program is federally-funded, Jackson said.

Merle Ryan, assistant director of the work study program, said because middle and low income students are seeking education elsewhere, there are fewer undergraduates who are eligible for work study because their family's income is too high.

Also, those who are eligible for a work study position often prefer to borrow money or find non-work study jobs to glean better pay, she said.

Ryan said a few students have sought work study positions to supplement their financial aid packages, but added that several jobs are still available.

The Job Fair, scheduled to run Sept. 13 in the Student Union Ballroom, is a massive recruiting effort by the University to secure jobs for students.

"For the past several years there have been more jobs than people to fill them," she said. "The jobs are available in all departments that hire students at the University."

New police car put on ice until next semester; budget woes stall Dept. of Public Safety's plans

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department will be forced to place a brand new, fully-equipped police car into temporary storage this fall because it is unable to afford its maintenance costs, the director of Public Safety said.

Public Safety Director Dr. Arthur Hilson said the vehichle, which cost $30,000, would have brought the total number of police cars operated by the force to 14.

Because the police cruisers are in constant operation during both day and night shifts, they are often in need of repairs the department is strapped to afford, he said.

In light of the University's budget crisis, Hilson said the department will stall usage of the new vehicle and instead "save" it until next year, in case another cruiser breaks down.

Plans are also in action to increase foot patrols to cut back on additional car repairs, he added.

"We run those cars 24-hours a day," Hilson said. "We'll put it away until next year, or until another breaks down. That's prudent management."

Student enrollment comes to a standstill Hiring freeze leaves departments crippled

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Budget cuts have forced the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees to further slash the number of students accepted into the University.

The state appropriated $23.5 million less for the 1989-90 school year than in 1988. As a result, the trustees voted to increase tuition and fees. After the increases, UMass still faced a $13.6 million shortfall.

Because of another $8.1 million cut, passed after fiscal year 1990 was already underway, UMass will be accepting no new students for the spring 1990 semester, said Associate Director of Admissions Juan Caban.

"People counting on coming here in the spring won't be very pleased," said Caban. "It's unfortunate, but there's nothing we can do about it."

Caban said the cuts will not affect students graduating from Massachusetts community colleges, students who delayed admissions until the spring, or those on a waiting list. Approximately 150 students will be entering UMass this spring, 650 fewer than in previous years.

Marilyn Haring-Hidore, Dean of the School of Education, said there are 11 open professor positions in her department due to retirement, death or professors leaving the University. The school couldn't hire replacements because of a hiring freeze at the university since last April. As a result, she said the department no longer has the tools to adequately serve the 800 students enrolled.

'We're already strained to meet our commitments, because of cutbacks, and an increased interest in teaching," Hidore said. "Cutting back is not necessarily bad, unless it costs us the quality of our program."

However, Deirdre Ling, vice chancellor for University research and developement said the cuts were necessary.

> ' Our budget has gone down so much that to provide quality education, we're going to have to cut down the size of the student body. '
> Dennis Madson

Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs said he agrees cuts were necessary.

"Our budget has gone down so much that to provide quality education, we're going to have to cut down the size of the student body," Madson said.

Caban said when prospective students inquire about spring admissions, they will be notified of the current situation by mail, and will be asked to reapply for the fall if they do not meet the above criteria.

Gen. Ed. courses added despite budget cuts

By KATHERINE LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

General Education classes have been hit by the budget ax, but not as badly as expected, according to figures released by the Undergraduate Scheduling Office.

Undergraduate Registrar Janet Bell, said scores of extra seats have been added to selected General Education classes, which students must pass in order to graduate.

The largest increases were in courses which fulfill the History, Diversity and Social and Behavioral Science requirements.

Norman Aitken, associate provost for undergraduate education, said declining enrollment and increased fees, including the newly-instituted curriculum fee, has allowed the University to add seats in General Education classes.

"We will be down 500 students [this fall] and 600 students in the spring semester," he said. "For every student we don't bring in, there will be five more seats open."

However, Bell said several departments did suffer substantial losses in class seating because their enrollment is traditionally low or because they do not have enough faculty or teaching assistants to schedule additional classes.

She advised undergraduates who are waiting for their General Education requirements in Humanities and Fine Arts to first fulfill their science requirements, where more seats are open.

UMass sophomore helps Armenian quake victims

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Nearly one year has passed since a mighty earthquake tore through Soviet Armenia, killing tens of thousands of people,crumbling buildings into sand, and scattering piles of dirt and rubble where cities once stood.

Relief tents dot the streets of Spitak, temporary shelters for those lucky enough to survive the phenomenon which, observers say, "nearly wiped the city off the face of the earth."

Sona Dulgarian, a University of Massachusetts sophomore of Armenian descent, spent four weeks this summer attempting to rebuild the ruins and raise hope in a city still stricken by grief.

"I felt it was my duty as an Armenian to get involved and help out," said Dulgarian, who is also a member of the UMass Armenian Club.

The trip was sponsored by Land and Culture organization, which sent some 20 volunteers to rebuild those areas most devastated or participate in archaeological digs exploring ancient villages unearthed by the quake.

They lived in small cottages that Dulgarian said were considered a luxury in comparison to the "pre-fab" makeshift houses donated by the Italian government and other shelters erected for people whose homes were destroyed.

The land is riddled with scars, she said. Mounds of concrete slabs that once were bustling factories now mark the crude horizon, punctuated by smaller piles that once were homes to scores of parents and their children.

There are also the living scars, those who remain wrought with disbelief that such a tragedy could wipe out entire families, homes, and cities in seconds.

"They've gone through so much," she said. "People walk around crying still to this day."

Dulgarian recalled watching a man in tattered clothing stumble down the street clutching a stack of papers — the death certificates of his entire family.

"He was just saying, 'they're all gone. They're all gone," she said. 'Those people you can't even talk to."

Although months have passed since the tragedy, there has been little reconstruction in the affected areas, Dulgarian said, blaming workers sent from the Soviet Union for the delay.

"Basically, they do nothing all day," she said of the workers. "If (the earthquake) had happened in America, they would've had the cities rebuilt by now."

Many of the Armenians expressed increasing anger toward the "Russians," because they suspect the government has diverted much of the relief materials sent from outside countries to sell on the Black Market, Dulgarian said.

"A lot of the stuff that got sent there was probably stolen," she said. "People are suffering and they're holding it back. There's not much you can do about it."

Halfway through the trip, Dulgarian suffered an appendicitis attack which required emergency surgery in a nearby hospital — a nondescript building crawling with insects and where patients are usually housed six to a single room.

"I was hysterical. I had to help myself onto the operating table," she said. "If it wasn't for the earthquake, (the doctors) said I wouldn't have had pennicillin or antibiotics."

Dulgarian's cousins brought her meals daily, which they stored in a small refrigerator in the corner of her room because the hospital was unable to provide food.

"I didn't step on the floor without stepping on a cockroach or an ant," she said. "There was one broom to a floor and no set times for nurses (to administer) shots."

While recovering from the operation, she toured the area and visited several of the earthquake's survivors, including a school girl in Spitak whose family's three homes were destroyed in the disaster.

The girl was working on the third floor of a nearby factory when the earthquake struck and tumbled the building to the ground and pinned her between two concrete walls. She was freed by nearby workers and then rushed to a hospital in California where one of her legs was amputated.

Five months later, recovering alone and unable to contact her family, she discovered while reading an Armenian newspaper that her younger sister was found dead beneath the rubble of a collapsed schoolhouse, huddled next to the teacher in her second grade classroom.

While Dulgarian listened to their story, she said: "I didn't stop crying the whole time. They lost cousins, aunts, uncles, grandparents."

"You can see the depression in their faces, it's so sad," she said. "They've gone through so much. They can't even cry anymore."

The Radio Reading Service of Western New England (RRS/WNE), a non-profit radio network for the print-handicapped, the vision-impaired, physically handicapped, and illiterate, has created a new radio program, "Of,By, and For the Elders."

The show debuted Aug. 27. It airs at 6pm on the last Sunday of each month. It deals with news, human interest stories and issues relevant to the elderly. The show is run by mostly retired volunteer broadcasters.

The program was planned to break negative stereotypes about the elderly. Organizers hope to raise funds and provide free-loan receivers to low-income, print-handicapped elders in Western Massachusetts. Grants from the Springfield Cable Television Program Endowment and the Agnes M. Lindsay Trust made the show possible.

Tower Library offers tours for students

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

The University Tower Library will be offering tours during the first two weeks of the semester.

The hour-long tours will be held on weekdays, September 6-8 and 11-15, at 10:30am, 1:30pm and 2:30pm. They will meet in the Library's main entrance lobby.

"We would like to invite as many people as possible to come and take the tour and learn how to use the Library," said Paula Mark, instructional services librarian and coordinator of orientations and tours.

The first half of the tours will take place in the main floor reference area. Students will be taught how to locate references using both the cart form [card catalogue] and the on line form [computers].

The Library is now in the process of changing everything to the on line form, although Mark admits that most of the Library employees still use the card catalogues. "We're all trying to force ourselves to use the computers," she said.

Students will also learn how to use the indexes of major magazines and journals, as well as use the almost two million items on microfilm and microfiche in the reference room. Where many periodicals are stored. Also on this floor, people may buy copy cards, which are cheaper than the ten cents a copy most pay. Cards good for 100 copies sell for $7.00.

The tour then moves to the new third floor location of the reserve section, formerly housed in the Goodell Library.

If there is time left, Mark said that she often brings the tour group to a certain floor that may be of special interest to them, such as bringing many Psychology majors to the Psychology floor.

Mark also coordinates tours for classes and special groups. "It's just a good way to get acquainted with the Library," she said.

Moving replica truly stirs

"Many of the names I don't really remember. Everybody had a nickname overseas: Shortround, Levitt, Thumper, Pigman. Everybody had a nickname, so now it makes it hard when you look for the names (on the Wall) because you don't know his name is Peter Johnson, or Donald Senti. He was Sneaky Pete, or a hundred other names . . ."

Bob Bobala

That was part of one veteran's reflection while he visited the portable Vietnam Veteran's Memorial Wall in Greenfield, Massachusetts this summer. The Moving Wall, which made its first appearance in this state during July, is a half-size replica of the monument in Washington, D.C. Completed by a small group of Vietnam veterans, it began touring the country in 1984. Its purpose: to give those who are unable to make it to Washington a chance to visit the Wall.

I was there for what turned out to be one of the most difficult days of my summer. As an intern at a Springfield public television station, I was assigned to work on a piece about the Wall. I felt hopelessly inadequate for the job of interviewing Vietnam Veterans for television. The only thing I knew about the war came out of a textbook.

After arriving at the Moving Wall display and promptly locking my keys in the car, I sought assistance at the military police headquarters. One MP was more than willing to help me when I asked if he had a tool with which he could break into my car. "Sure," he said, sliding a desk drawer open, pulling out a hammer and resting it in front of me. "I don't like reporters."

"Neither do I," I answered. "But I'm from public T.V. Go easy on me."

He called the local towing company, and for a little while, I spoke with him.

"I've been on duty since eleven last night," he said. "But I don't mind. I went out to the Wall at about two in the morning. Paid my respects then. It was dark, quiet. Nobody was around. That's how I like it."

He said the only thing he recalled about the War was seeing clips of it on television news once in a while, being too young to remember anything else. But he could still feel the pain when he went out to the Wall.

I was too young to even remember highlights on the news. The only time I recall someone talking about the Vietnam War was when I was visiting some relatives in Colorado. I didn't understand. Never heard the word Vietnam. I came back to Massachusetts thinking there was a war going on in Colorado.

I've been to the Vietnam Memorial in Washington. That Wall carries a greater physical presence, but I was more moved by this half-size replica. I don't know why yet. Maybe it was because this Wall was so close to home. Even though people came from all over, it seemed there was more of a communal atmosphere.

Maybe it was some of the letters, left at the base of the wall by visitors and wrapped in preserving plastic by National Guardsmen. The one that sticks out in my mind began: "Dear Bill! I'm so very sorry that you died in my place . . ." Maybe it was the true stories I heard about one friend dying in another's arms, about an unfulfilled wish to see parents one last time, about years of suffering and the need to go on but never to forget.

I didn't know any of the 58,000 people whose names are up on that Wall, but now I know some of the veterans whose names aren't. I felt the pain. Not like those veterans do, but I felt it.

I vacationed with Bush

There is a special bond between President Bush and myself that never surfaced pre-polls. You see, Mr. Pres and I have a lot in common that begins with our houses and doesn't end with our different hairstyles. For one, the Pres and I both vacationed from our hectic jobs and houses (mine may be green but our shutters are both stark white) to New England on the Fourth of July. Remember that holiday weekend? You were undoubtedly roasting weenies and popping fireworks. I was at Cape Cod.

Alise Harfield

Just knowing that our President (who only gets a 3-day vacation, while I get a 3-month vacation in the summertime) had enough sense to relax on that busy July 4th, made the elevation of my feet and consumption of multiple Morrison and Schiffs that much more smooth.

I mean, after all that stress he must have had when given permission to torch his flag collection in the White House (the mere thought conjures images of a large forest fire) he needed a break.

And thank goodness he wasn't around when the Supreme Court delivered the decision to practice nationalism and send to the states the abortion issue. Can you imagine if he'd actually stayed amongst the upset masses in the heat of Washington? Talk about a sweaty time . . . He knew the latitude at Kennebunkbed, Maine would be a lot cooler. Our northernmost state — he is so full of horse sense!

And to think, I chose the Cape . . .

So enthralled was I that the Pres and I had inadvertently chosen the same weekend to escape that I watched him (even with hot dog indigestion) diligently, on the television that whole day — fishin', golfin', joggin', flashin' a fleetin' smile while running away from the camera en route to his 6th mile.

Now that amazed me. I jog too, but by the third or so mile I lose all sense of direction as well as the ability to show teeth. What a happy-go-lucky guy. And to think that I heard on the news that the officials in Kenenbunkbed were exhausted in keeping up with his antics, er, jogging all day. All I can say to those flabby jerks is, "Hey, not everyone is in the kind of shape that the Pres is in." Hans and Franz would be darn proud.

And I can't neglect to mention Dan Rather, for whom I felt the utmost pity — standing upright so that the top of his fluffy hairdo just grazed the highest pillar of the Supreme Court — for a whole days worth of broadcast, without even sitting down once. Now there's stamina.

It got me thinking about my own fitness regimen. For not only can't I jog 6 miles in Massachusetts or Maine, grin as I bear it, or use my agility to dodge approaching objects like cameras or talking people like reporters, I can't speak to anyone while running for fear of losing much needed oxygen. But the Pres can! I saw him!

When asked to comment on the landmark decision to uphold Roe vs. Wade he breathlessly replied, "See Sununu on the Noon News."

Which brings up yet another trait Bush and I have — we both love to tongue twist.

Maybe in our dreams . . . it will all go away

As the flames from Old Glory and Sioux City add heat to the already hot, summer sunset, a man named Wright cries — he has done many a wrong.

Nine solemn people from hallowed halls steal choices from those sinful, unmarried, irresponsible, pregnant harlots. What a moral travesty.

Meanwhile, a funeral procession becomes a ghastly parade as the casket is jostled and the body falls to the ground, the dirt serving as the perfect backdrop for the last scene of Khomieni's life.

At least there was no tear gas or beatings at this parade. The Black residents of Capetown, South Africa were not as fortunate.

Dirt, rather mud, comes quickly to the minds of those who celebrate the 20th anniversary of a mud bath that was full of idealism, peace, pot and raw sewage. Ahhh, those golden days.

The ground rumbles, not because of an earthquake, but due to the crumbling of buildings that have been silently eroding for the last eight years. The Horrible and Ugly Dastards (HUD) are finally forced to wake up and smell the coffee, preferably not the Columbian kind which is tainted with drugs and judicial blood.

Still, coffee serves as the drink of overachieving, ambitious career people. (Contrary to Ted Kennedy's high-power drink of 20 years hither. How about a drink, a drive and a dip?) You see, it's those pesky nine from the hallowed halls again. They certainly do wear those blindfolds of justice, blinded to the massive discrimination of minorities and women that still exists . . .

Oh, but who can pity those poor yuppie slobs who can't get promoted, at least they are not being labeled as "property" in their discrimination law suits. Quite unlike those frozen embryos that follow the struggle for the stereo system on the list of priorities for a divorce settlement.

Meredith O'Brien

The summer heat presses down as a Texan enjoys a quaint vacation get-away to Kennebunkport, Maine. Fishing, hunting, relaxing out there, away from civilization, from problems, from the cries of the families whose members are being held, somewhere, in Lebanon.

Dan Quayle keeps busy by defending a poll that says most people believe that he is not qualified to take over the presidency in an emergency. At least he's doing something.

Across the Atlantic another plane follows the popular trend of crashing, each crash trying to outdazzle the other. This one was into the mountains smashing the dreams of ending hunger in Ethiopia and ending the life of an esteemed Congressman. Oh — and some other people died too. We don't know what their dreams were.

A Polish guy named Lech captures the heart and dreams of a nation. The first open-house in nearly 45 years with Lech serving as the gracious host, welcoming people and embracing their democracy. But excuse the mess, the last occupants were a bit messy. Give him a while to clean the place up.

But have we missed something in this brief summer synopsis? What could it be? Wait! Do you hear something? Cries, shouts, declarations, aspirations . . . being mercilessly smashed and stifled, but not killed?

No, I guess not. Nothing happened. Nothing. Those pictures, the film footage, the sound bytes, none of that was real. All fake.

The blood, the tears, that beautiful goddess, the brutality — all a hallucination.

You know us Americans, all up on hallucinogens, drugged up. We imagined the whole thing — it's all a bad dream contributed to our drug problem. You know (wink, wink) our drug problem.

We can just close our eyes. It's all a dream, and in our dreams it will all go away.

TODAY'S CHILD is loyal and understanding, but also very demanding. Little escapes this Virgo's keen eye. Although these children have a passion for history, they also excel at mathematics and journalism. Patient and determined, they handle tedious situations better than most people. Courtesy wins these Virgo's favors and opportunities that less polite competitors will never receive. Family life is a top priority. Nothing means as much to these children as close ties.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: comedian Jo Anne Worley, Gen. Claire Lee Chennault, patriarch Joseph P. Kennedy, actress Jane Curtin, baseball's Vince DiMaggio.

WMUA - still crazy after all these years. . .

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

By age 40 most people are experiencing mid-life crisis. They feel old. They turn in their radical views for conservative ones, and their favorite radio stations have changed format several times, that is, if they're still around.

On September 23, the University of Massachusetts' very own 1,000 watt student run station, WMUA (91.1FM), will be celebrating "Forty Years in Your Ears."

On October 1, 1949 the tiny 10 watt AM station did its first broadcast which could be picked up only in the UMass dormitories.

Becky Zumbruski, a senior early education major and current manager at WMUA, can only laugh when she hears stories of the station's humble beginnings "Forty years ago they only had one turntable, so after every record you had to stop and talk while someone cued up another," she said.

The station is pulling out all the the stops for its birthday bash, and is inviting all MUA alumni to join in the festivities. On Saturday afternoon, September 23, the station will hold workshops on the broadcast industry. In the evening they will hold a formal dinner with cocktails, dancing and a live band.

For its listeners, WMUA will be giving away commemorative T-shirts, mugs, and bumper stickers on the air. These items will also be for sale on the Campus Center Concourse. Sales will help defray the cost of running the station, one of the few college radio stations to remain on the air 365 days a year.

Fundraising is not foreign to the people at WMUA. They hold yearly print sales in the Student Union Ballroom. They also hold an annual telethon for a week in December in which they raise between ten and fifteen thousand dollars. "But what we raise and what we receive are two different things," Zumbruski said, "People pledge these huge amounts of money and then decide they can't afford it."

Fundraising week concludes with the traditionally infamous twelve hour polkathon. "We have guest DJs and stuff. It's all so cute,"said Zumbruski with a sly smile.

Zumbruski takes great pride in the station she manages, and deservedly so. While most college stations blast the Cure and R.E.M. all day, MUA has a truly alternative program schedule.

"We're very diverse," Zumbruski said. "And for the last three years we've had block programming. If you're into jazz you'll be hearing it every weekday from 9 a.m. to noon.

Zumbruski has a particular fondness for the World Beat slot, which is noon to 3 p.m. weekdays. "It's all the world's music, from Celtic to Egyptian to reggae, all combined into three hours."

Although the lack of any other radio stations on campus has led to an overflow of people at WMUA, Zumbruski said that the station is always looking for new members. There will be a meeting for people wishing to join the station on September 7, at 7pm in room 174 of the campus center.

To become a DJ, students must first complete a five week training session, take a written exam, and go thrugh a mock show. They are then ready to do overnight shifts or "bedspins" from 3 - 6 a.m. If the students can stay awake through two of those they become official DJs and do fill-ins.

But Zumbruski stressed that there's more to MUA than just spinning records. "MUA isn't just what you hear on the air," she said. "There's also programming, financing, technical, all sorts of great hands on experience. We've got 16 directors, which means we've got 16 different Scruffy the Cat claws into Pearl St.

By AL ARPAD
Collegian Correspondent

It's been a long summer here in Amherst, and the local clubs haven't offered much, but last week the Pixies played Pearl Street, and lots of other great shows are coming up. This Friday, Scruffy the Cat is at Pearl Street, and the only excuse for not going is if it sells out. Tickets are $5 ($7 for anybody too young to participate in the hooch subsidy program for entertainment.)

Scruffy the Cat has played around Boston since 1983, and, fortunately for Boston, they haven't quite achieved national prominence despite extensive touring, four records and an appearance in Newsweek. Their albums are widely underrated because they don't engender the same thrashing frenzy as a live Scruffy show. Scruffy fans are an energetic bunch, known for their propensity to consume tremendous quantities of Budweiser and subsequently exude it all over the dance floor in a sweaty, scuffling mass of humanity.

Because these Scruffy fans are often the kind of anti-pop purists who hate all the albums their favorite bands put out, many regard Scruffy vinyl as an adulterated product, cleaned up and watered down for general consumption. I like the albums because I can understand the words.

Charlie Chesterman is the lead singer for Scruffy the Cat, and he writes most of the lyrics, with participation from band members Steven Fredette, Randall Lee Gibson IV, and Burns and Mac Paul Stanfield. The variety, humor irony, and sheer quantity of the lyrics sets Scruffy apart from most other LOUD bands. The philosophy and subjects are simple, usually love, but the subtle subtexts are worth listening to.

In fact, the lyrics are part of a secret dark side that the band has tried to downplay; several members of Scruffy the Cat are from the midwest, and they listened to a lot of country music during their formative years. If pressed, they will admit to a deep and abiding admiration for the likes of Hank Williams, Hank Snow, Lefty Frizzell, Patsy Cline and Raymond Burr, most of whom also sang simple songs about love with subtle emotional subtexts, except possibly Raymond Burr.

East Coast contempt for country music has been a source of profound anguish for Scruffy the Cat, but they remain in Boston anyway. This is possible only because so many people in Boston don't recognize the country influences they profess to despise, especially at extremely high volume.

All four of Scruffy the Cat's records were still available last time I checked, and I recommend all of them. The first, High Octane Revival, is an EP containing my second favorite song, "Happiness to Go." BOOM BOOM BOOM Bingo is another EP with a great live side. Tiny Days is perhaps their best overall effort, but the latest, Moons of Jupiter, would be worth buying for the cover art alone; the many good songs inside are an added bonus.

Go see Scruffy the Cat on Friday night.

Candy and Dreyfuss worst bets of the summer

FILM REVIEWS

• Ride away

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Let it Ride
Hampshire Mall Theaters

It is not often that a movie is so bad that you feel sorry for everyone in it, but that is exactly how Let it Ride made me feel.

I really wanted to like this movie, and I loved every character in it. Richard Dreyfuss turns in a fine performance as an obsessive gambler whose having a "very good day" at the track. Teri Garr is her wonderfully ditzy self in playing Dreyfuss' fed up wife who is prone to temper tantrums. David Johansen, (a.k.a Buster Poindexter) is fun to watch as Dreyfuss' friend and fellow obsessive gambler whose on the biggest losing streak of his life.

Little known Robbie Coltrane is brilliant in his small role of the ticket seller at the race track. Look for him in bigger roles soon.

But for this boy, Jennifer Tilly stole the show. Every bit as eccentric as her sister Meg, Tilly plays the typical, voluptuos airhead who goes after Dreyfuss when she finds out he's rapidly becoming a rich man. In her short red dress and long, long legs, ("They go all they way from my ass to the floor.") she is truly a sight to behold. And if you thought Suzanne Somers was funny in Three's Company, which I admit, I did, you'll think Tilly is hilarious.

What amazes me is that a film that has so many fine characers in it, can turn out to be so boring. When the movie starts you think the beginning credits will never end, and once they do you immediately wait in anticipation for the end credits to begin.

The story is drawn and boring. A poor man goes to the track, wins a few races on hot tips, and goes home rich. Yes, there are all those petty moralistic themes about how money and greed can ruin friendships and marriages and change people, but you know everything will come out fine in the end.

In fact, you know everything that is going to occur in this movie before it happens. But the pacing is so slow, (It is obvious that director Joe Pytka knowns nothing about comedic timing and pacing.) and the plot is so thin that they drag out every scene to try to make it suspenseful. Instead they are just dull. When Dreyfuss bets every penny he's got on a race you know he has to win or the movie would end.

I kept hoping Dreyfuss would lose.

• Say uncle

Uncle Buck
Hampshire Mall Theaters

Not since Gone with the Wind has a movie . . . just kidding. Uncle Buck was written and directed by John Hughes and stars John Candy. That said, I'm not sure why I ended up in the theater but since I did here's a warning: this movie is worse than anything John Hughes has previously done (that bad) and worse than any John Candy vehicle.

The best part of the evening was eating popcorn and gazing at the yawn inspiring photos of beaches and rainbows. Sitting through a preview for Turner and Hooch, I made a decision and bailed out to see that last half of Casualties of War. An attentive ticket taker suggested I return and I shuffled back to the credits screaming John Hughes did this and this and this.

The story concerns a (guess what?) big, funny, social misfit (read non-yuppie) who comes to look after his two nieces and nephew after his brother and sister-in-law are called out of town due to a tragedy that, (of course) resolves itself by the film's end.

So we have a movie where Candy tries to relate to the kids and vice-versa. The six and eight year olds prove to be no problem, after all, Buck is about the same age as them mentally.

But look out, there's a fifteen year old girl actually considering going all the way with her boyfriend. The boyfriend turns out to be a snake, Candy commits at least two felony offenses against him, and the girl in question stays virtuous and resolves her love of her mother.

That's it. A subplot with Uncle Buck trying to keep a relationship going also resolves itself by the end of the movie.

The reason I did go was that John Candy has to find some work to live up to his talent and I thought this might be it, but no. Candy seems to have as little ability at picking good scripts as Hughes has at writing and directing them.

Candy does rise above the material on a few occassions, but Hughes is a notorious drainer of talent.

There's a character called Marcie who lives across the road who comes to the house just as Candy is trying to do the laundry. She doesn't see him, but she hears him say, "Open up, I want to shove my load into you." The only sound in the theater was the crunching popcorn and a few coughes. This movie was just Three's Company with expletives and without a laugh track.

Preferences and poetry published

By WILLIAM JAMES GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff

The first sentence of the foreward to Troy Publications I spells out both the ideal of the University of Massachusetts poetry society, and a need on this campus. It reads:"Troy Publications is a response to the lack of adequate representation of undergraduate student creativity."

Linda Woods, the assistant editor of the magazine says, "Troy is an extremely valuable project because it gives a chance to be published for people who might not get that chance for several years, if at all. In doing so we not only promote creativity, but the confidence that people can see that their work is in print."

The organization is also responsible for putting poetry readings, including last semester's highly successful reading by the poet Robert Pinsky, which also included reading by UMass undergraduate poets John Purin, Christine Joyce, Connolly Ryan and Damian Roskill. All of the undergraduate poets are included in Troy Publications I, and all of their work is more than worthy of publication.

Upcoming events include a reading given by the poet Roger Weingarten. This event is scheduled for November 7th and should hopefully coincide with the release of Troy Publications II. All inquiries, including those of budding poets/writers should be addressed to Box 83 in the Student Activities Office.

- Also, out as of today is the new CATE guide. The recipient of criticism in the past, most notably by an anonymous professor who informed the guide crew that it was "nothing more than a complaint rag," this year's issue promises to be "bigger, better and more informative" than past issues, according to Linda Woods, who has worked on the guide all summer along with Elayne Ott and the editor of the guide Brice Paul.

CATE: short for the Course and Teacher Evaluation guide is just that: a written description of about half the courses offered at UMass from the perspective of students who have already taken the described classes. The CATE workers compile the information they recieve from student surveys and write a paragraph or two on each class based on that information.

The CATE guide is available throughout the UMass Campus. Copies of preceding years' CATE guides are available at CASIAC (College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Committee) main office in Machmer.

Fine Arts Center goes worldly

BY WILLIAM JAMES GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff

The 1989-'90 season at the Fine Arts Center is being dubbed the "World Class" season, an appropriate title with artists representing ten different countries coming to the University of Massachusetts to strut their fine artistic stuff.

Kicking the year off will be the legendary jazz group The Dave Bruebeck Quartet holding the stage at the concert hall on October 2nd. Then on the 12th and 13th of October, the Ralph Lemon Company and the Bebe Miller company will perform two seperate pieces and one collaborative piece.

Coming in for October 16th and 17th the Free Street Theater will perform Project in a piece subtitled A West Side Story For Now which will combine music, dance along with multimedia video, and be performed by residents of the Cabrini-Green Housing Project of Chicago.

From October 30th through November 1st the Musical Into the Woods will be performed, exploring what happens to the Brother Grimme characters in the land of "happily ever after".

November 30th will bring the Pulitzer Prize winning drama Driving Miss Daisy to the concert hall. And those Christmas/Chanukah blues can be driven away by the annual Jazz All Stars concert featuring Max Roach on drums and Clark Terry blowing the bugle.

If your appetite is not wetted, if you're not drowning in saliva, it's because this is not a comprehensive list. Performances will be announced in the Collegian before they're shown, but if you would like a complete list of the performances call the Fine Arts Center at 545-2511 or drop by the Box Office to the left of the Atomic French Fry as you go toward the Haigus Mall.

Note- the Department of Music and Dance will be having 36 performances over the course of this semester beginning on September 19th with a Faculty Recital on oboe and piano. Comprehensive details are also available at the FAC Box Office.

"Once you go through three consecutive meetings you become a staff member and have a complete run of the station. And you can do stuff on staff like Third World Affairs or graphics after one meeting if you have a staff member with you," Zumbruski said.

Zumbruski encouraged people to come into WMUA and just "hang around" and learn different types of music. She admits to having learned a great deal about blues and jazz since she joined the station.

Area record stores cater to collectors

It is common fact that in any college area music stores are as prevalent as bars, and the Amherst/Northampton area is no different. To avid music collectors finding the right record store means hours upon hours of enjoyment a day. Excluding any mall record stores, where prices are usually high and selection limited, here is a list of some of the best record stores in the area.

Al-Bums - Located on North Pleasant St. in Amherst, the store specializes in used albums that sell for about $4. They also sell new albums for $8-$10 and have a wide variety of rock, jazz, folk, independent labels, and bootlegs (under imports). They also have rare albums and do special orders. Their CD selection is limited.

Dynamite Records - In Northampton on the second floor of Thorne's Marketplace, Dynamite is good for buying used records and bootlegs. Besides rock, it also has a good classical selection. New albums range from $7-$10 and they also have a limited supply of CDs.

For the Record - Located in the back of Faces in Amherst, this store has a wide array of rock and classical albums ($7-$9) and CDs ($11-$13). It also has a variety of overstocked albums for $3-$4.

Main Street Records - In Northampton, this store is a bit more expensive than most record stores, but has just about everything in rock, hardcore, alternative, and imports. It has a downstairs room devoted entirely to CDs, and also sells t-shirts, cult videos, and European magazines. It's a fun place to shop, but is often crowded and cramped.

Yesterday and Today - Also on North Pleasant St. in Amherst, this store is a virtual haven for Deadheads. It specializes in music of the Woodstock era. All the albums are very cheap ($6 tops), but the store has very few new releases. They do have a good collection of folk, soul, and rhythm and blues albums, old magazines, and tie-dye t-shirts.

Play of feminine reflections

By JOHN PATRICK MUSULIN
Collegian Correspondent

Berries Red is a new one-woman play written by Pat Schneider, directed by Rhonda Blair, and featuring actress Deborah Lubar. The play is a production of the Valley Playwrights Theatre and will be performed at the East Street Theatre in Hadley at 8 p.m. on September 7-9 and 28-30.

Berries Red is about the memories and experiences of women being raised in Middle-America over the past fifty-years. It vividly portrays the poigniant realities of class struggle, war, racial tension, poverty and individual identity. It is truly about "remembering where you came from."

The playwright, Pat Schneider, believes that we can learn a great deal from a person's memories. She said, "I am interested in the possibility of one woman's collected stories, along with the songs she knows by heart, being a negative image [photographically speaking] of her generation."

Schneider also finds theraputic value in storytelling. "I believe we need to tell our own stories and hear one another's stories in order to heal, in order to find our way to each other and to ourselves."

The title of the play, Berries Red, is drawn from a saying Schneider often heard while growing up in Missouri, "Berries red, have no dread; berries white, flee on sight." It's phrases such as this, as well as songs and other bits of cultural flavor and experience, that are woven into the fabric of our lives and used as the vehicle of expression in this play.

Schneider earned a Master of Fine Arts degree in Creative Writing here at UMass and is a recipient of a Massachusetts Artists Foundation Award. She is Director of Amherst Writers and Artists. A Question of Place, one of her previous works, has been described as, "a small masterpiece," The other two primary forces within this production are Blair and Deborah Lubar.

Rhonda Blair, the director of this production, is an Assistant Professor of Theater at Hampshire College. She earned her Ph.D. in Theater and Drama from the University of Kansas and has directed eighteen plays including Hedda Gabler and Waiting for Godot.

Deborah Lubar, considered by Pat Schneider to be "the most mature actress in the valley," teaches acting and directing at Smith College. Recently, she performed in a one-woman play, Life and Fate.

The originality and structure of the play, along with the experience and professionalism of the artists involved, provide the potential for a successful production and an enjoyable night at the theater.

It is so rare to come across a unique and stimulating idea that is creatively and effectively expressed. I look forward to experiencing, Berries Red.

Fall flicks to frequent or to flee from

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Now that all the big blockbuster movies of the summer have made their millions (Batman), or quietly fizzled away (Great Balls of Fire), it is time to see what the fall has in store for us, and there could be a few pleasant surprises to go with the flops.

Cookie - Starring Emily ("Up yer bum") LLoyd who was so charming in Wish You Were Here, and Peter Falk, who is always a joy to watch, this comedy should be seen for the two stars alone.

Black Rain - Hot property Michael Douglas attempts to relive his Streets of San Francisco days. He plays a New York cop tracking down a killer in Japan. How's that for originality? I guess there's always room in Hollywood for one more big-budget, mindless action movie, no matter how bad it is.

Johnny Handsome - Another eclectic role for Mickey (9½ Weeks) Rourke. He plays an ugly convict who recieves plastic surgery upon his release from jail to gain revenge upon Ellen The Big Easy) Barkin for putting him in there.

PREVIEWS

Drugstore Cowboy - Handsome Matt Dillon tries to end his string of turkeys in this low-budget flick. In a totally different role for him, Dillon is actually quite good as complex drug addict Bob Hughes, who leads his friends in drug store robberies to support their habits.

The Gods Must Be Crazy II - After this summer, I'm kind of sequeled out. But The Gods Must Be Crazy, about an African Bushmen tribe, was such a charming, off-beat comedy that this one will be worth seeing if it is just half as good as it.

Framed - Tom Selleck, after the two successful comedies Three Men and a Baby and Her Alibi, tackles a more serious role as a man sentenced to six years in prison on a bogus drug charge. It's from Touchstone so it might be good.

Men Don't Leave - Directed by Paul Brickman (whose last effort was Risky Business) and starring Jessica (Crimes of the Heart) Lange, the movie deals with a recently widowed woman who, for financial reasons, is forced to move in with her two sons. Joan Cusack co-stars.

The Nightbreed - Fear not horror fans, novelist Clive Barker is back in the director's chair once again. The man who gave you the beautifully repulsive Hellraiser has cast director David Cronenberg (The Fly, Dead Ringers) in the lead role of a psychoanalyst gone mad. A guaranteed frightfully fun gore-fest.

Pop Will Eat Itself

Pop Will Eat Itself will leave you very hungry

By WILLIAM JAMES GEORGIADES

This Is the Day . . . This Is the Hour . . . This Is This Pop Will Eat Itself
RCA

A few years ago a new word was added to the English language. Looking for a new movement in the ever flagging music world, a few scribes in the British music press started to use the word grebo in connection with a few bands whose major assets were their names and lack of both hygiene and talent.

RECORD REVIEW

Thus Zodiac Mindwarp and the Love Reaction, Gaye Bikers on Acid and Pop Will Eat Itself were born into the realm of rock critic credibility.

What these bands had was spirit, the spirit of amateur musicians being silly, rude and occasionally charming. What these all male British bands had was a freshness that is now, in the case of Pop Will Eat Itself especially, stale and disposable.

This Is The Day . . . This Is The Hour . . . This Is This is the new album by PWEI and comes complete with Tipper Gore's granted wish of a label warning consumers of the offensive material on the l.p.

What's strange about this is that there isn't much of anything offensive on the album: the songs are peppered with the odd expletive that reminds one of kids just learning such phrases, and the music is simply not affecting enough to be anything more than mildly annoying. The most shocking aspect of this album is it's lack of anything affecting.

The singer of the band, Clint Mansell, has this to say about the groups musical technique: " We've never been brilliant musicians, so instead of nicking guitar riffs and learning how to play them ourselves, we can just take them from old records."

Here's the entirety of the song "Poison To The Mind:" "I don't like songs, music is just organized noise . . . and noise is poison to the mind." It makes a fine quote, a bad song and thouroughly overrates This is this. . . as being as strong or powerful as any poison. Organized noise is exactly what this new album is, but it only mildly irritates the mind.

But enough of the negative stuff. Grebo was only a word that signified nothing at the end of the day and Pop Will Eat Itself was and is a great name for a band. There's even a vaguely infectious dance track in "Can U Dig It," but it's nothing worth paying for.

Listen to some We've Got a Fuzz-Box and We're Going to Use It, the all female British band instead of these boys. They've got the spirit.

Tina Miller makes Telefund telefun

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Almost every night at 6:00 students walk down into the basement of Memorial Hall and spend the next three and a half hours calling parents, alumni, and friends of the University of Massachusetts, asking them to support the school with a contribution.

If this sounds like a boring, monotonous, thankless job to you, it should, as most telemarketing or fundraising jobs are just that. But since January, when Tina Miller took over as project director at the UMass Telefund program, it has become one of the most fun, exciting and, at $5 an hour plus bonuses, highest paying jobs on campus.

Whenever the Louisville, Kentucky native's name is brought up the word "energetic" always seems to be used.

"Tina has so much energy and excitement," said Tom Navin, a sophmore business major and clerical worker at Telefund. "She makes you not mind doing jobs you don't even like doing because she's so enthusiatic and appreciative."

Haydee Font, who is working towards her masters' in multi-cultural education as well as working as a shift supervisor, agreed with Navin. "I've never seen such an energetic person in my life. She really knows how to motivate people," Font said.

Font often collaborates with Miller to come up with the numerous themes and posters that help to give Telefund its upbeat appearance. Miller, whose southern drawl makes her sound even perkier, gives Font all the credit. "She's incredible. She's so creative. I love trusting students and letting them take the initiative like Haydee does. Tom and Haydee have been great this summer in helping us to get ready for the fall."

Some of the various themes that Miller and Font have dreamed up at Telefund include formal night, in which callers were asked to come in formal attire and were seated at their personal tables decorated with roses and lit by candle. There has also been safari week, wild west week, and casino week, when callers rolled dice to determine their bonuses. There is also a joke night every Wednesday, and occasional talent nights.

But Miller, who admits to being "even spunky for a southern person," is aware that she holds a very serious job. Telefund goals this year include reaching 70,000 prospects and raising $2 million. "We're gonna make it if it kills us," Miller said. She quickly added with a wink and a smile "We're all fired up about it."

It seems that Miller's endless energy comes from throwing herself completely into her job. After graduating from the University of Dayton, in Ohio, and serving as a caller and assistant of their telefund program, she immediately took her current job at UMass, leaving behind her family, friends, and long time boyfriend. She flies home at least one weekend per month to see them.

Miller admits that she takes her job too seriously, and that if she has a bad day at work she'll take it home with her. But once the weekend comes the bundle of southern energy really erupts.

"This job is my life and I work really, really hard during the week, and the weekends are mine," Miller said. "I go on a lot of weekend trips. I love travelling around New England. I start singing and dancing as soon as I get in the car.Then I'll come back and pull up just in time for the Sunday night shift all fired up.

"I love it here. I love the job," Miller said.

Her eyes grew wilder as her speech began to quicken. "My favorite part is working with the students and building enthusiasm. I love training students. I think this job gives students confidence. It's great to watch the callers 'click', to really catch on after the first few calls."

The excitement that she expressed in her voice was genuine. It was obvious she could have talked about Telefund for another hour without me asking so much as one more question.

"This is my social life. I get so excited to come to work because it's all I've got here. Everything else is in Louisville or Dayton. If I'm having a bad day, once the calling shift comes in and I see the fun group, I feel better.

"I love watching people stay on here for a long time and watching friendships form among the callers. And I really enjoy seeing how people respond to different motivational skills. I try to treat each caller individually."

This is a practice that has spread to the callers as well. Miller said, "We try to add personal touches to all the calls and ask the alumni if they have any questions about the school or need anything special. If they ask for something we try to give it to them. We want to keep good relations with all the alumni."

In the fast-paced, high pressure world of fundraising, burnout is often a natural occurrence. It is something that has not escaped Miller's thoughts. "I'm aware that a job like mine has a high turnover rate. I'm aware of the burnout stage. But I'll be getting an assistant soon, and all the workers and supervisors here are great. I'm just having a great ol' time."

And so are the students who work for her.

Cult videos to rent instead of Tom Cruise flicks

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

A cult movie is difficult to define. No one is quite sure what qualities it contains that make it any different from any other film. But, in general, a cult movie is one that is loved, worshipped, and incorporated into the lives of the few people who have heard of and seen it (usually numerous times). It is truly incredible how a movie can so deeply affect the life of one person and remain virtually unknown to the rest of society that is too busy buying tickets to the latest Tom Cruise flick.

If I knew how to make a good cult movie, I'd probably be doing just that. But I think I know a good one when I see it, and these are some of the best.

Harold and Maude - Forget about Gone With the Wind, this is the best movie of all time. Directed by the late Hal Ashby (Being There, Coming Home), the comedy stars Bud Cort (Harold) as a twenty year old obsessed with death until he meets and falls in love with the eighty year old Ruth Gordon (Maude), who teaches him, and us, how to enjoy life. See this movie and you'll want to run out and experience life.

Stranger Than Paradise - A black and white deadpan comedy classic from Jim Jarmusch. Three oddballs travel across the United States and get bored. Other Jarmusch movies include Down By Law (starring Tom Waits), and the brand new Mystery Train.

This Is Spinal Tap - Director Rob (When Harry Met Sally) Reiner's first effort. This hilarious "rockumentary" follows a fictitious, aging, heavy metal band across the country. The songs, like "Big Bottom" and "Listen To the Flower People", really put this movie over the top.

Repo Man - A very weird movie starring Emilio Estevez and Harry Dean Stanton. Estevez learns how to repossess cars under the tutulage of Stanton. Aliens also play a role in this flick that has a great punk soundtrack. But for a better depiction of the punk underworld, you may wish to check out the ever weirder Liquid Sky.

Plan 9 From Outer Space - Beats out Attack of the Killer Tomatoes as the worst movie ever made. The spaceships are paper plates on strings and the alien is a guy in an ape suit with a fish bowl on his head. The backdrops, and the actng, are obviously cardboard. This is a must see.

Toxic Avenger - Another horrible low-budget horror spoof. From Lloyd Kaufman's Troma Pictures, who also gave us Class of Nuke 'Em High, Surf Nazis Must Die, and the recently released Toxic Avenger II, the movie deals with a New Jersey weakling who gets thrown in toxic waste and becomes a superhero. It has just enough gore, skin, and demented humor to satisfy the sickest of minds.

Re-Animator - A sometimes gross, always intense, horror movie. Like From Beyond, it is based on an H.P. Lovecraft story. When a brilliant, but slightly deranged, medical student finds a way to bring the dead back to life, unforseen circumstances occur. This movie has one repulsive scene that gives a whole new meaning to the term "giving head."

Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai - The funniest science fiction film ever made deals with a brillant neurosurgeon and physicist who throws it all away to become a rock star. See it if only for the line, "No matter where you go, there you are."

Eraserhead - With deepest apologies to all Dennis Hopper fans, this David Lynch movie beats out Blue Velvet only for its total weirdness. The story takes place in a future world where everyone is given a lobotomy. Don't ask me what it's about because I have no idea. Just see it.

A Clockwork Orange - A very, very violent film from Stanley Kubrick. In this different depiction of the British youth underworld, Alex and his friends get involved in some real "ultraviolence." See this and "Singing in the Rain" will never sound the same to you again.

Polyester - What kind of cult movie list would this be if didn't contain at least one John Waters movie? Starring the late drag queen Divine, this movie beats out other sickening and disgustingly shocking Waters' comedies such as Mondo Trasho, Pink Flamingos, and the more mainstream Hairspray only because of its use of "odorama."

That's my list. The Rocky Horror Picture Show was purposefully deleted because everybody already knows about it, and the people that participate in it just aren't funny anymore. The movie is tired and worn. But the movies on this list are something different that I hope you'll consider next time you walk into your video store. You may find them more interesting than Top Gun.

Hoodoo Gurus better and louder than ever

By AL KAUFMAN

Magnum Cum Louder
Hoodoo Gurus
RCA

Well, they've done it again.

For the fourth time in as many attempts, the Hoodoo Gurus have released a well-crafted pop album with many sure-fire singles that most people will never hear.

I don't know if it's because people don't like their name, or because singer-songwriter-guitarist David Faulkner is so hideous looking, but for whatever the reason people choose to ignore this band, it's a pity that more people will never listen to Magnum Cum Louder. (And let's be honest. You should buy the album for the title alone.)

The album's first single, "Come Anytime," is the best new pop song around. The upbeat, bouncy party tune builds slowly and is a perfect match for Faulkner's wonderful voice. The song would probably go to number one if the band changed its name to Bon Faulkner and Faulkner permed his long, greasy mane. But, alas, neither is the case and the song is destined to become a minor hit at best.

This is not the first time this has happenned to the Gurus. In their previous album, the slightly uneven Blow Your Cool, (which is still better than many bands' best albums), the band called upon their friends, the Bangles, to sing back-up on their first single "Good Times." Longtime Guru fans accused the band of selling out. But the song barely entered the top forty and the band remained only underground stars.

It would seem that even Faulkner doesn't know what he's doing wrong. Although the catchy "Where's the Hit?" is about baseball, it is really a song about standing up to pressure. The Gurus, now with their third record label, know that if they don't make it big soon, they may never get another chance.

The rest of the album is filled with the usual brilliant songs that you've come to expect from the boys from Sydney, Australia. "All the Way" and "Another World" are both typical Hoodoo Guru bouncy pop tunes that would be big hits if there was any justice in the music world.

"Shadow Me" is a beautiful ballad in which Faulkner tears down his defenses and proclaims his need for the woman he loves. Like "I Was the One," from Blow Your Cool, it's not sugary or schmaltzy, just wonderful.

The band rocks out, too. "Axegrinder" is a hard-edge tune complete with fuzzy guitar. "Glamourpuss" sounds like something the Ramones would write. Led by the driving drums of Mark Kingsmill, the song, like Living Colour's "Glamour Boys," takes a comedic stab at all the fashion-conscious, shallow trendoids that have polluted our world.

"Baby Can Dance (Pts. II-III)," their most ambitious work to date, starts out as a beautiful ballad, but has a driving chorus and Beach Boy-esque harmonies in the bridge. All the parts sound great on their own, but don't quite gel when mixed together.

Other songs, such as "I Don't Know Anything" and "Hallucination," ("A private form of recreation.") demonstrate Faulkner's comedic flair.

Death is a subject that strikes Faulkner as especially funny. On the Gurus'debut album, Stoneage Romeos, Faulkner wrote a hilarious love song for a dead girlfriend ("Dig It Up"). On Mars Needs Guitars, (their best album to date) Faulkner's "Death Defying" is such a hook-filled, bouncy tune that it's absolutely impossible to take him seriously when he sings, "All my friends are dead, or they're dying."

For Magnum Cum Louder, (The title sounds better every time I hear it.) Faulkner penned the upbeat "Death In the Afternoon," in which the Aussie sings, "Seems to me it'd be so inhuman."

Alright, so maybe the Gurus are a slightly sick, morbid bunch of guys. They're the type of band that's not quite sick enough to be considered alternative, but not sane enough to be mainstream. Both the alternative and mainstream crowds don't know what they're missing.

Dancing despite big cutbacks

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

The year has just begun and already the University of Massachusetts' dance company, the University Dancers, are in full step. This year, despite devastating budget cuts, the dancers will be as busy as ever.

The dance department will have the honor of two guest choreographers, Marcus Schulkind and Sue Casey, doing residency here. Schulkind has performed with his own dance company in Boston and New York. He has taught dance throughout the country, and will be choreographing and teaching the University Dancers in September.

Casey, a former UMass graduate, has also taught dance throughout the country. She choreographed the highly successful, sultry jazz number, "You" for the University Dancers last year, and will be working with them this year in October.

The public will be able to view the finished products of Schulkind and Casey, as well as many other dance numbers, during the University Dancers in Concert show, which will run from November 30 to December 2 in Bowker Auditorium. The dances range from ballet to jazz to modern.

During the winter break the dancers will depart for a grueling two week tour across the state. "We try to break even [financially] on the tour," said Artistic Director Richard Jones. Jones tries to give his dancers the best conditions possible and is extremely worried about the effects the recent budget cuts will have on his program and tour.

"The budget is not large enough to meet all our expenses," Jones said. "We used to put the dancers up in motels, but this year we may have to put them up in people's homes. That's not good because you just don't get a chance to relax in a strange person's home."

Jones also said that for most of the dance numbers, the department does not have the funds to buy the required scenery, lights (which they must rent), and costumes. "We have to keep costuming to a minimum, sometimes reuse or do variations on them, which hurts the morale of the performer. It's very hard to get into the dance when they had just worn the costume for a totally different dance.

"The students have to buy their own shoes which can wear out after just two or three performances or rehearsals.

The dance group usually begins a day on tour at 5 a.m. They load all the lights, scenery, costumes, and floors onto the bus themselves. When they reach their destination, they unload, set-up, and do a quick run through. By then it usually is time to perform. Then they break the set down and do it all over again the next day.

Gallery art shows

The University Gallery of the University of Massachusetts will be presenting two exhibitions from September 9 through October 20. They are Field Plug by James Skalman, and Story Quilts by Faith Ringgold. An opening reception for both exhibitions will be held on Friday, September 8 from 5 to 7 p.m. at the University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center.

Skalman is from Southern California and has presented one-person exhibitions of his work at the La Jolla Museum of Contemporary Art and the Boehm Gallery. For Field Plug, he will build a site-specific, architectural instillation consisting of a centrally located house/temple set within an elevated field that will extend to the boundries of the main gallery. Three channels placed on the east, south, and west axes of the house/temple will allow movement within the environment. Skalman's structures are typically sparce in form and his use of light, color, and sometimes sound are combined to create subtly changing atmospheres.

New York artist Faith Ringgold uses pieces of painted canvas and fabric together with written narratives to create her vibrant Story Quilts that recount personalized versions of Black American history. Ringgold's inspiration comes largely from stories told to her by people she knew during the 1940s and 1950s in Harlem, N.Y. Her artwork crosses two traditional forms - the folk tale and the quilt, both of which use methods and materials that are inherited and recycled. Ringgold merges social and personal experiences that involve the need for familial, community, and ethnic kinship.

Party with Premiers

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

If you're looking for a rip-roarin', foot-stompin', funky, bluesy, rockabily, party, good-time band, then the Premiers are just what you've ordered.

PREVIEW

The barroom-boogie band will be jamming at Twister's, Thursday night, September 7, to celebrate the release of their new six-song tape, We Will Bury You, which comes complete with a picture of Kruschev banging his shoe on a drum.

The tape, as you'd expect, is all over the place; from the bluesy "Leave a Light On," to the '60s surf-sounding "Danger," to the rockabily "Walking in Circles." But everything is done with great skill and style, and the songs are a lot of fun to listen and dance to.

The band was founded in 1982 by Dorchester Massachusetts native Frankie Blandino, who is the band's guitarist and handles most of the vocal chores. But it wasn't until 1987, when bassist Rory MacLeod (formerly with Roomful of Blues) joined the band and began co-writing with Blandino, that the Premiers began to play more than just blues. They won the 1987 WBRU Rock Hunt in Rhode Island and their reputation has been growing steadily since.

With Steve Brown on drums and Dennis Kelly on guitar, the boys made it to the semi-finals of the WBCN Rock & Roll Rumble this past summer and expect to release an album on Atco Records as early as next month.

But you must see this band live to experience their true firepower. Although on record they sometimes slip into Fabulous Thunderbird clones, on stage they become unpredictable crazed maniacs. You won't want to miss them.

Women head return of the acoustic guitar

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

The women are leading and the men are following.

For many years, the electric guitar has been considered a necessity for any rock 'n' roller. But with women like Suzanne Vega, Tracy Chapman, and Michelle Shocked leading the way, the old acoustic guitar is once again staking its claim in rock music.

The men are beginning to take notice, rockers Elvis Costello, Tom Petty, Neil Young, Bob Mould, and Pete Townshend (with the Who), all hit the road with their acoustics in hand this past summer.

Bob Mould, the former front man of the now defunct hardcore band Husker Du, performed acoustic versions of Husker Du songs as well as songs from his acoustically flavored solo album, Workbook, on his recent tour.

Mould, like Petty and Townshend, writes all of his music on acoustic guitar. In Mould's case the songs were transferred to electric guitar to keep with Husker Du's sound.

Okay, it's no big surprise that most song writers, including Bruce Springsteen and John Cougar Mellencamp, write on acoustic guitar. But suddenly these people are beginning to share their acoustic versions with the public. Springsteen released his brilliantly stark Nebraska album acoustically because he felt the songs lost much of their passion when played on electric. Artists such as Mellencamp and the group R.E.M. often use the B-side of a single to record an acoustic version of their hit. Graham Parker released a live album, Alone in America, of his solo acoustic tour of the last year. Even the electronic synth band Depeche Mode has a new acoustic single called "Personal Jesus" out.

Why is this acoustical revival occuring?

Emily Saliers of the folk duo Indigo Girls, whose single "Closer to Fine" gets my vote for best single of the summer, thinks she has the answer. "In a busy, active, alienating era, it's a very personal alternative," she said.

Although the humanistic element does play a part, the fact of the matter is that acoustic music has become commercially successful. After watching Suzanne Vega's Solitude Standing and Tracy Chapman's debut album go multi-platinum, artists realized they could play the music they wanted to play and earn a living at the same time.

The timing is perfect. Our uncreative generation is content to rehash trends and styles from the past. Right now the Woodstock era is prevalent, (although the disco era is frighteningly beginning its resurgence). People have become reacquainted with the folk rock of the 60's. "Classic" rock stations have virtually taken over the FM dial. Acts such as Bob Dylan, The Grateful Dead, and Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young have become more popular than they were twenty years ago. Political consciousness is on the rise. People are once again listening to the lyrics and messages of songs. They don't want a thrashing guitar or an annoying electronic synthesizer to drown out the words.

Or maybe Emily Saliers is right. In today's high-tech, complicated, and confusing world the idea of just a simple acoustic guitar and a voice sounds refreshing.

Artist gives barn facelift

BY KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts barn got an unusual paint job this summer.

Jim Andrews, a local artist and 1989 graduate of the UMass art program, created a 40 foot landscape piece on the side of the art barn on campus. The barn is being used as a studio for senior painting majors at the University. It is located in front of the Textbook Annex where many students can view it as the semester begins.

Art professor Norman Phillips is the person who made this project a reality."This outside mural enhances a part of the campus. Art such as this has been appearing all around lately," he said.

Although Phillips has been instrumental in producing public art at UMass, he does not take credit for it. "I am on many boards and committees responsible for art on campus. But, I merely facilitate it. It's the artists who create it."

Jim Andrews has painted murals from 17th street in New York City to the stairwells of the Fine Arts Center. He believes art is something people should see everywhere they go, not just in galleries. "I like art that is more out where the people are," he said.

Andrews confessed,"I'm actually paying to make this mural. It started out where the University would pay for paint and put up the staging, but it all fell through.

"I was working on a 40 foot ladder and I was swaying back and forth every time the wind blew. It just wasn't working out,"he said.

Andrews managed to procure some scaffolding and discounted painting supplies and has been at work ever since. He had help in the outset of the project but the helpers "dwindled" during the summer, leaving him with one assistant.

Despite these obstacles, Andrews hopes to have the murals completeed by the first week of classes.

"What I'm doing is a sort of new idea. We're trying it out to see if people like it. I'm sure people will notice it anyway. This barn is a billboard for the art department. This mural should change in a couple of years," he said.

Andrews is one of many artists showing their work in places other than just galleries. "There has been a manifestation of public art in the area, especially Northampton." But," he said smiling, "I can't say if I've been a part of it or not."

Andrews strongly believes that art should be moved out of the galleries and into the public realm. "This is art for people, not art for the artist. I think that's important."

Yankee Conference up for grabs

Delaware the favorite; UMass picked third

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Who's going to win the Yankee Conference this year? It depends on who you ask.

The Yankee Conference coaches and media gathered recently at the annual Yankee Conference Clambake at Boston University's Case Center, mainly for the purpose of reiterating what has been known and practiced in this league for several years.

There is total parity in this conference, so sayeth everybody. One could justifiably pick any of the nine teams involved for the top spot without being laughed all the way to the nuthouse.

You want proof? We've got it.

A poll of 37 media representatives revealed seven different guesses for first place. Two teams, Boston University and the University of Maine, actually got a vote for each of the nine positions in the standings. Strange stuff, kids.

"It has become virtually impossible to forecast the race for the title," said Rhode Island coach Bob Griffin. "It is difficult to even separate the conference into an upper and lower level. I don't see any clear-cut favorite for the title. It should be a very exciting season."

So pull names out of a hat. Flip a coin 47 times. Your guess is as good as anyone's.

"I don't know what it will take. Our conference every week is a dogfight," said UMass coach Jim Reid. "Other conferences are not playing big games every week. In this league, every game is a big game."

"In this league, you can be last and still be capable of winning every week," said Maine coach Tom Lichtenberg, one of two rookie coaches in the conference. Lichtenberg hasn't even tasted the tooth-and-nail war called the Yankee Conference yet, but it doesn't take long for the Rolaids to be put to use in this league.

"There are a lot of teams that will compete," said Connecticut coach Tom Jackson. "A team picked first can finish last."

Just ask Reid, who saw the league's coaches favor his squad in 1987, only to have the Minutemen betray one and all by finishing 3-8. And last year it was Richmond which was the prohibitive favorite. Of course, the Spiders finished — you got it, last with a league mark of 2-6. Just that ol' YanCon magic at work again.

Jackson feels the closeness of the conference has hampered postseason efforts.

"The last seven weeks we're playing each other, and there's a lot of emotion," Jackson said. "But by playoff time we're beat." Delaware and UMass both lost last year in the first round.

They could win it again. Then again, so could Villanova. Or Maine. Or Richmond, BU, Rhode Island, Connecticut or New Hampshire. Or — oops, that's everyone. Well, you get the point.

"Maybe we should go to court under oath, but the truth is, this conference could end up a nine-way tie," Reid said. "It's very difficult for anyone to end up with zero, one or two losses."

Last year, two setbacks were good enough for Delaware and UMass to tie for the YanCon beanpot. Two may be enough this year. Or even three.

"Anything can happen, because there is parity in this conference," Reid said. "As a coach it prepares you for a nervous breakdown, but it makes for a great conference for the media and fans."

The following is a capsule outlook at each of the teams, in order of predicted finish:

Delaware: The consensus is that the Blue Hens can do it again. Associated Press has them ranked fifth in the nation in a preseason poll, and they captured 17 of 37 first-place votes.

Coach Harold "Tubby" Raymond will have to replace nine starters, including quarterback David Sierer and fullback Tim Healy. Raymond is projecting Rob Prosniewski as the starting QB.

But the key to this team over the years has been its defense. Young last season, Raymond hopes a year's experience will make them that much better. All-YC picks Mike Renna and John Levelis lead the pack.

"I think our defense knows they can play and they have come of age as a result," Raymond said. "I think we have the potential to be a very solid football team."

Connecticut: Any talk about the Huskies starts with Yankee Conference Player-of-the-Year, junior quarterback Matt DeGennaro. Jackson will have to find replacements for split end Glenn Antrum and tailback George Boothe, as well as linemen David Franks and Jim Carriere.

"In Matt DeGennaro we have a quarterback who is one of the premier players in the league," Jackson said. "In his first two seasons he was inexperienced but surrounded by experienced players to team him. This year, Matt is the experienced player who must serve as a teacher."

Massachusetts: See separate preview.

Maine: Lichtenberg inherits the Black Bears from former coach Tim Murphy, who left for the University of Cincinnati. With that he gets the services of Mike Buck, one of several top-notch quarterbacks in the league last year. Buck missed spring drills, but should be ready for the season opener. Also returning is Freshman-of-the-Year, tailback Carl Smith.

"If Mike Buck is healthy, we're a whole lot better with him than without him," Lichtenberg said. "We have enough strengths to push us over the top. And they love me up here, I'm still undefeated."

Villanova: The Wildcats will have to replace eight starters on defense, but may make up for it on offense. QB Kirk Schulz is back, along with his favorite target, split end Robert Brady and tailback Jeff Dingle.

"I truly believe we have the most experienced skill position players on offense as anyone in the conference," said coach Andy Talley. "We have to build around that group and I hope we can put the pieces together in the offensive line and come up with an offensive unit that will be competitive."

New Hampshire: The 'Cats are admittedly still spinning from that 64-42 free-for-all against UMass that ended the '88 season in Durham. Gone from last year is QB Bob Jean, split end Curtis Olds and defensive end Basil Jarostchuk. Tailback Norm Ford returns, and coach Bill Bowes will look to Mark Carr to replace Jean.

"Bobby Jean was tough, but if he (Carr) plays up to potential I don't think we'll miss a thing," Bowes said. "He's got good size and smarts and a strong arm. Potentially we can field as strong a defensive team as we've had here in a number of years."

Boston University: Coach Chris Palmer has a large cast of skill players returning, including Jay Hillman in the backfield and Daren Altieri and Darvell Huffman as receivers.

He will have to replace All-YanCon defenders Jack Reybold and Mark Seals, and find someone to take over for QB Jim Schuman as the driver of the Terrier run-and-shoot offense.

"We will continue to be in a rebuilding year," Palmer said. "We came on late last year, yet we are still thin in some areas. Look for the defense to be solid with the offense, depending on the line, to come around quickly."

Richmond: Jim Marshall, the league's other rookie coach, tries to rescue a ship that has been sinking steadily the past couple of years. It won't be easy for the Spiders without graduated tailback Erwin Matthews or a set quarterback.

"We're thin. We're allotted 70 scholarships and we only have about 57 players now," Marshall said. "Our big problem is staying healthy, which is the name of the game in this conference."

Rhode Island: The Rams are picked last despite the fact that 20 of 22 starters return from last year. Quarterback Steve Monaco and tailback Chris Poirier anchor the offense, with cornerbck Kevin Smith the mainstay on 'D'.

"We should be vastly improved with the return of most starters and key 1988 performers," Griffin said. "This group has added experience. Each area of our team is improved."

Football looking to repeat in '89

Eight starters return on defense; offense showing promise

UMass coach Jim Reid hopes Jerome Bledsoe will boost the offense in 1989.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

So far, Jim Reid's career as head coach of the University of Massachusetts football team has been one big ride on a mythical merry-go-round.

Reid took over the head coaching job from Bob Stull in 1986, and his Minutemen posted an 8-3 record and a share of the Yankee Conference championship. In 1987 it was reversed to 3-8 before last year's resurrection, another 8-3 campaign, a share of the Yankee Conference beanpot with Delaware, and a berth in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs.

So done with mirrors, what does that leave for 1989? Reid can only hope the trend doesn't live on.

"I'm still in shock over what happened in '87," Reid said. "Sometimes you win and sometimes you don't. But it opened my eyes that this isn't the great fairyland everyone thinks.

"Last year we could have been 3-8 and we were 8-3," Reid said. "But a guy named Dave Palazzi made every great play he had to. That guy was running around with my paycheck in his hands every week.

"We were ninth in rush defense and ninth in pass defense. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure it out," Reid said. "Something had to happen and someone had to pull the trigger."

But Palazzi is gone, and Reid isn't going to put as much emphasis on the quarterback position as in years past, when either Palazzi or Tim Bryant could do the job on any given Saturday afternoon.

So now he has to find a new captain for the good ship Minuteman. As of now, the favorite appears to be fifth-year senior Roger Baldacci, although sophomore Gary Wilkos surprised a lot of people with his strong preseason camp. Junior Paul Tornatore and sophomore Tom Fasano are also vying for the spot.

Reid will look more to the defense, the backfield and the receivers to pick up the slack.

"This year we're going to try and spread it out. A little more to the tailback, a little more to the wide receivers," Reid said. "And we've got to improve on defense. It's going to be an interesting year."

One thing Reid will look for is more consistency in his team's performances from week to week. The '88 season started with a wild 45-42 comeback win over Maine and then the tide changed all the way to a frustrating 10-7 loss at Delaware.

Finally it grew back to the point of the great shootout at the UNH Corral, when UMass spun the University of New Hampshire into the ground, 64-42 in Durham, NH. That was enough for a berth in the playoffs, but the Minutemen dropped a first-round contest at Eastern Kentucky, 28-17 in a heavy rain.

"We can really improve on defense. Last year we were last vs. the rush and last against the pass. We can pick that up substantially," Reid said.

"We've got some guys coming back. We play a three-man line with four linebackers and four defensive backs," Reid said. "But at any one point you've got to evaluate your team. You want to know who is the best football player. If a linebacker is better than a lineman, you've got to change your structure. Get your best team on the field."

Eight players return from last year's defense, which should lead to some improvement. Leading the way is All-ECAC, All-New England and second team All-Yankee Conference nose guard Joe Cullen. He will be flanked on the line by senior Steve Brothers at right tackle and senior Mark Pompi on the left.

At linebacker, the Minutemen will be hard pressed to replace I-AA All-American John McKeown. Veterans Drew Comeau, George Karelas and Matt Tulley all return, while junior Chris Tenkin is slated to take over McKeown's spot.

"Drew Comeau has been injured all his life, but when he's not playing baseball he's lifting like a wildman," Reid said. "He's running and he feels great. He can hardly wait.

"Then there's a kid named Matt Tulley who's just a beautiful guy. There's not a harder worker or more polite person," Reid said. "And there's George Karelas and a guy named Sean Cummings. We've got to get those guys on the field."

The defensive backfield was intact from last year until recently. Vaughn Williams, Pat Doran and Garrick Amos all return, while Don Caparotti will take over at cornerback.

The fourth member of that crew was probably the best of the lot, All-New England cornerback Jerome Bledsoe. However, because of an injury to scheduled starting tailback Steve Olsen, Bledsoe was shifted to tailback in a recent intrasquad scrimmage and was impressive enough to win the job.

David Mitchell is the starting fullback, although juniors Duncan MacRae and Jim Pastorick all saw quality time there last year. Chip Mitchell and Mike Tobin return as receivers, while Ron Villone is scheduled to be the tight end.

"Our receivers are as good as we've had here. We've got to get them the ball," Reid said. "Chip Mitchell is an incredibly great story. He almost quit after the UConn game in '87, but we moved him to wide receiver and he's done a great job.

"Mike Tobin was a walk-on, but he has blazing speed. He's like a Smurf out there," Reid said. "Once he catches the ball, he's gone."

Senior Ron Blauvelt and sophomore Lamar Newsome will also see time at the receiver spot.

"With Lamar and Ron you could see three or four receivers on the field at the same time," Reid said.

The offensive line remains as probably the weak link of the team. Only two starters return from last year and the depth there has thinned out during the preseason.

Al Pogarian returns for his second year as starting center, and Anthony Guidice will start at right tackle. Paul Mayberry was an All-YanCon guard in 1987, but knee surgery has left his status in question. Senior Paul Connor was scheduled to start at right tackle, but a herniated disc in his back will probably sideline him for the season. Jay Gabbe is the favorite to start at left tackle.

"Our big problem is that we've had some depth problems on the offensive line," Reid said.

Handling the kicking chores will be Marco Gabrielli, who was the guy on kickoffs last year but sat back while veteran Silvio Bonvini handled PATs and field goals. Gabrielli has shown a strong leg and good accuracy.

Gabrielli is also a candidate for the vacant punter's position, along with David Mitchell and MacRae.

The Minutemen open the season Saturday against James Madison at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Following another non-league game at Lehigh, UMass opens defense in the Yankee Conference dogfight at Maine. And this year, winning the Yankee Conference doesn't promise to be any easier than it has ever been.

So the matter of argument is this. Can UMass repeat 1988? Despite the various question marks, Reid remains cautiously optimistic. Nobody has come right out and expected the Minutemen to repeat what they did last year, which is just fine with him.

"In this profession, the only way you can like what you're doing is to consider it a privilege to be with a bunch of people who run around on the field like wild men," Reid said. "I like this football team. I really like these guys. They've got a good attitude and they're hard workers. You can get the most out of them. It's going to be fun, I think."

Who'll be the quarterback?

Senior Baldacci the favorite; Wilkos a contender

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Last year at this time, the talk of the University of Massachusetts football team centered around the quarterback controversy.

Well, it's a new year and the quarterback situation hasn't quite been resolved yet. But at least it's getting there.

In 1988 UMass coach Jim Reid had the luxury of trying to choose between Dave Palazzi and Tim Bryant, both seniors and both successful at different times throughout their collegiate careers. Palazzi got the nod and lived up to the billing, merely rewriting most of the UMass record book in leading the Minutemen to the Yankee Conference title and a berth in the Division I-AA playoffs. He also won the Bulger Lowe Award as the top offensive player in New England.

"This year, we have to find someone to pull the trigger," Reid said.

Until recently, who that someone was was a total mystery. But that appears to have changed as of the Minutemen's intrasquad scrimmage.

Entering preseason camp there were several candidates — four, in fact, for the job. However, with Palazzi and Bryant gobbling up all the quarterbacking opportunities since 1985, there hasn't been much time for anyone else to get a shot. Between the four quarterbacks vying for the spot, they have taken a grand total of three snaps from center in collegiate competition.

Leading off the list is fifth-year senior Roger Baldacci. The Swampscott native has all of the aforementioned game experience to himself, courtesy of a last-minute series in a blowout win over Rhode Island two years ago. Baldacci didn't throw a pass though, so he has bagels across the board for his stats line, just like the others.

Reid admits that Baldacci, being the only senior in the group, is the sentimental favorite, and he has

Derwin: an inspirational leader to teammates

Senior midfielder decides to play one last season

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

For the past four years, Kathy Derwin has been an inspiration to her teammates. She has endured four operations on her knee after tearing ligaments in a basketball game during her senior year of high school.

But last year, Derwin needed someone to inspire herself. She still had one year of eligibility to play field hockey left but could graduate in the spring if she wanted to.

She went to visit a friend in a hospital in New York. She had played with that friend in the Empire State Games a few years back. Her friend's illness was a lot more serious than Derwin's knee had ever been.

Her hair was falling out. She was yellow with cancer. That friend was dying of Leukemia. In December, she passed away. Her friend's death suddenly gave Derwin a new perspective on life and her decision to come back to UMass was made.

"I had been through a real lot with my injury but nothing like what I was seeing in front of me," Derwin said. "At the end, it was just awful. And to see something like that, you realize that when you have an opportunity like I do to play, you should take advantage of something like that.

"That was a big decision-maker just because it seemed so silly to me. I had such a chance to continue. There was no reason why I couldn't play anymore. I had played so much hockey with this friend and I think it made me realize it could have been any one of us."

Derwin's contribution to the team goes way beyond her play on the field. She has seen spotty playing time while recuperating from her injury the past two years but has always been ready.

"She has really been part of the backbone of the team from the bench," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "On days that she wouldn't play, she would come out after games and run to stay in shape so when her next opportunity came around, she'd be ready to go and I think that was very much of an inspiration for her other teammates."

That was in evidence in one of UMass' bigger games last season when the Minutewomen were battling Boston University in a game that would have a big bearing in the jockeying for position in the NCAA playoffs. Derwin, who had not been seeing many minutes all year played the entire second half and scored the game winning goal in overtime. It was the only goal she has scored in her college career.

"Hockey is a game where you need to play enough to get through inconsistencies until you're playing consistently," Derwin said. "And that was sort of a turning point where I was getting enough playing time to be in their long enough to play through little mistakes.

"When I got subbed into a game, you're all of a sudden playing with people that you don't get to practice with as much. When you're not a starter, you work with the non-starters for the most part against the starting team."

The change in playing time just happened to coincide with a change of position. Derwin started out the year as a sweeper but ended up as a midfielder where she felt more comfortable.

"It (sweeper) didn't work out to be the best position for me," Derwin said. "I approached Pam in midseason and spoke with her about maybe playing midfield which is where I had played in high school. At midfield which I feel is my more natural position, I saw a lot more playing time toward the end of the year. I really enjoyed that position and this year so far in practice, that's where I've been playing."

This year right now is a question mark for the Minutewomen with so many of the team's players having graduated. But Derwin has faith in the lady that has guided the Minutewomen to ten straight NCAA playoff appearances.

"I believe in my heart and I guess I probably have since I came here and became a part of this team that we will never have a poor season here," she said. "The people that Pam brings in here and stays here have a work ethic that's much the same as hers. You don't settle for anything. Nothing is good enough. We will never have a poor season at UMass in this field hockey program. I don't think that Pam would allow it. I don't think that she has that kind of people working with her."

If Hixon continues to recruit people like Derwin, UMass will probably never have a bad year.

"Kathy has really, even though she hasn't played very much, been a real team leader," Hixon said. "Half the time I think Kathy is the team tutor. She has always been very upbeat as far as being supportive and knowing what the right thing is to do. She is kind of an advice-giver when asked."

Yet, Derwin did not know if she fit in this year with most of her best friends already graduated. She knows now.

"Its been very fun," Derwin said. "I wasn't sure how it would be because so many of my best friends have graduated and gone on. But its been a real fun group We have a large group of freshmen who are real fun kids to be with. And I don't feel like an old lady. I don't feel like I don't belong. I think this year more than any other year, we're going to have to come together as a team. And so far, it's been coming along quite well."

Derwin sat out her first two seasons at UMass while recovering from her knee injury. In October of 1985, Bertram Zarins, a doctor that also is a surgeon for the New England Patriots and the Boston Bruins, did a complete reconstruction on Derwin's knee. It has been a long road back.

"It was very tough," Derwin said. "I don't think anyone knows in the beginning what its going to entail and

Minutewomen have a few aces up their sleeves

Hixon says UMass will surprise this year

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

UMass coach Pam Hixon surveys her troops at a preseason intrasquad scrimmage.

His show may be too old for many of the players on the University of Massachusetts field hockey team to remember. But one of Gomer Pyle's famous lines strongly echoes the feelings that coach Pam Hixon has about this season.

Surprise, surprise, surprise.

"I'm excited about this team because I think that we are going to surprise people," Hixon said. "I don't think people know the kind of depth we had on our bench. I think they look at us and say: "Oh everybody's gone from UMass, they're not going to have very much.

"I definitely think we have some surprises in our hip pocket for people. That keeps me motivated and keeps it fun for me."

But golly coach, you lost seven big players to graduation including an All-American goaltender and the big penalty corner combo of Ruth Vasapolli and Julie Stuart.

"I'm very confident in the kids that are returning," Hixon said. "They've got good experience. They have been sitting and seeing spot action for a long time. And now, they're just ready to go and explode."

Most of them have spent their weekends sitting on the pine, waiting for the nod from the coach. Senior forward Mara Frattasio flourished in that role last season. When she got the call from Hixon, Frattasio made the most of her opportunities, netting six goals and dishing out two assists.

"There are a lot of kids here, who are experienced but who were not starters," Hixon said.

Junior Beth Thornton was watching from the bench last year as the Minutewomen won the Atlantic 10 Championship. She was watching two years ago when UMass went to the NCAA's Final Four and finished third. Now, she's ready to play.

"Beth Thornton has come into training camp looking great and she's a very intelligent player," Hixon said.

Another player from last year's bench, that Hixon feels can add some scoring punch is junior Kim Hannigan. One player that figured to be a big part of UMass attack has been lost for the season though. Junior Elise McDevitt, who saw significant minutes off the bench last season has been sidelined with a knee injury all summer and has already conceded the season.

A sleeper may be Leigh Hallam. Hallam is a junior and did not see any meaningful playing time last year. But in her freshman campaign, Hallam actually led the Minutewomen in scoring for the first few weeks of the season before being relegated to the bench for the rest of the year.

Sophomore Lisa Charron, who did not see a single minute of action at her goaltending position last year, suddenly is a top candidate for the anchor of the defense. She has had a strong preseason camp.

Which is more than you can say about her counterpart, Phillipa Scott. But Scott adds a little mystery to this year's goalie contest. She has not been at the first two weeks of practice, but that is because she has had visa problems. Scott is a 23 year-old goalie from Arima, Trinidad in the West Indies. She has played for England's National under 21 team as a backup goaltender as well as the Trinidadian National team.

Charron and Scott will be trying to fill some pretty big shoes. Last year's goaltender, Cindy Cox gave up just .52 goals a game last year before being named All-America. She had taken over the starting goalie job from Lynn Carlson, who had graduated and had also been an All-American.

The MInutewomen do have a couple of starters coming back however, most notably senior Kathy DeAngelis who has led the team in scoring for the past two years. Last year, DeAngelis, who is a member of the United States Reserve team, netted 11 goals and three assists.

Sophomore Dawn Trumbauer, who as a freshman won a starting spot on opening day, should also lend a hand in the attack zone. Trumbauer scored seven goals and two assists last year.

Senior Bernie Martel, was an option on the penalty corner play last year and can be a very explosive midfielder. UMass was hurt in the midfield by the graduation of both Vasapolli and Pam Bustin who had been a four-year starter.

In back of Martel will be Lisa Berardinelli. Berardinelli was on the bench for most of the first half last season but worked herself into a starting role by the end of the season when the Minutewomen lost to Northeastern in the NCAA tourney. Kerrie Fagan, also was a starter for the defense, despite some injury problems.

The key this year for UMass may be to keep the ball away from those two as much as possible.

"I think we will have to play very good defense and that is everyone on the team," Hixon said. "What we're shooting for this year, is to have a total concept of team defense so that our deep defenders aren't playing a lot of balls. We have to try to keep the ball in our attack quite a bit because our experience is in our offensive end. I think if we can do those two things, I think this team will be very succesful."

One of the reasons the team was so successful last year was because Hixon had Stuart hitting rockets at the top of the circle off Vasapolli passes on penalty corners. Those two are not here anymore though.

"I'm not quite sure who will hit the ball from the endline," Hixon said. "I think that's just something any of the forwards can do. I think our big hitters will be Kathy DeAngelis, Bernie Martel, Kerri Fagan, and Lisa Berardinelli. All those kids have canons. They can hit the cover off the ball. I think we'll have a good corner."

Freshmen, such as Susan Bernegger, Joy Blenis, Kathy Phelan may also contribute somewhere down the line this season Hixon said.

And who knows, maybe one of them will come out the woodwork and surprise Hixon.

McDevitt sidelined for season with knee injury

Junior Elise McDevitt, who played a sixth-man type of role last year for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team will sit out this season with a knee injury

"Elise is medically unable to participate this year," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "She had a severe knee injury as captain of the ski team. She tore just about everything that was in there to tear up."

McDevitt scored five goals last year. The forward, who had blazing speed, was the fourth leading returning scorer from last year's 17-3-1 team. She earned a start in the Minutewomen's NCAA quarter-final playoff game at the end of the season.

"She's been making excellent progress," Hixon said. "And she's been on a sound rehab program throughout the summer and I would anticipate Elise to be with us for our offseason training in February and March. And be geared up at 100 percent for the summer and for next fall."

McDevitt injured the knee last winter, while competing for the UMass ski team. She has seen significant playing time since coming to UMass in the fall of 1987. McDevitt said she hopes to be back training in December. She has been with the team during the preseason training camp, watching the Minutewomen's practices from the bench.

Goalies vye for job

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

One can argue about it all day. But the goalie slot is one of, if not the most important position on the field in field hockey. After all, she is the last person that can stop the ball before it goes into the net.

Last year, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team had two goaltenders that could start for just about any other team in the nation, Sue Desmond and Cindy Cox. Cox ended up winning the job and going on to All-American status. But now both of them are gone and Hixon has another big decision to make. It is between sophomore Lisa Charron and Phillipa Scott, a 23 year-old who will attend UMass for the first time this fall as a physical education major.

Charron has one leg up on Scott, who missed most of preseason camp because of visa problems.

"Lisa has improved a tremendous amount from last year," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "Her decision making is better. Her overall skills are better. I've been pleased with her progress."

The experience factor goes to Scott though, who has played for England's National Under-21 team. The Minutewomen play a lot of games on turf this year and Scott played on turf quite a bit according to Hixon.

"Phillipa just brings another dimension to our team," Hixon said. "She's got a lot of experience on turf and she's got a lot of international experience so I think this gives us a good blend of people. Lisa does not have the experience that Phillipa has but at the same time, Lisa has played more grass hockey."

One of the reasons that Scott was recruited by Hixon is because quality goalies are hard to come by. She had one in Charron but if she went down there was no one behind her.

"We had recruited two Massachusetts goalkeepers," Hixon said. "Neither one of them had decided to come to UMass and I felt that they were the best of the goaltenders in the freshman class that would be entering. There was slim pickings for goaltenders at the high school level this season so when that fell through, and she (Scott) had expressed an interest in coming here to receive an education, I kind of picked up the ball and ran with it after that."

And the fact that field hockey is played on grass in Trinidad rather than on turf got Hixon even more interested.

"They don't play on turf in Trinidad, they play on grass," Hixon said. "That's what really spurned my interest even more because we need grass people because we play on grass. She has excellent speed."

Men's soccer ready for successful '89

Seven starters returning; schedule favors Gettler's squad

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts men's soccer coach Jeff Gettler believes in the home field advantage. He's seen his team win more often than not on Boyden Field in the last few years.

So what does he do? He compiles a schedule that has his 1989 Minutemen playing 12 of their 18 games at Boyden. Not a bad strategy at all.

Of course, you could be playing in Aruba and it wouldn't mean squat if you didn't have the tools. But no worries, mate. Gettler feels he has also amassed one of his best teams, one that is ready to make the long-awaited climb into the spotlight.

"We have seven seniors, and everybody is returning," Gettler said. "Other than in goal, everyone has played. It's a real veteran group."

Four starters did graduate from last year's 8-8-2 club, including goalkeeper Sam Ginzburg and defenders Mike McCormick, Mike Mugavero and Bret Blanton. But anyone can see that didn't leave the slightest ding in the offense. Ah, yes. Scoring goals. You have to do that to win, and Gettler thinks his team will put more than its share of shots between the pipes this year.

Leading the way is tri-captain and two-time All-New England, senior Steve Cesnek. Last year Cesnek scored 10 goals while usually wearing the opponent's best defender in his BVD's all game.

Joining Cesnek up front is junior Carl Hanks on left wing. And centering them will be sophomore Ray Cunha, who Gettler feels will take a world off of Cesnek and Hanks' shoulders.

"(Cunha)'s one of our players who has really developed over the spring and summer," Gettler said. "He'll be our target player and will take a tremendous amount of attention away from Cesnek and Hanks."

With Cunha running blocker, Cesnek and Hanks could explode.

"Last year every team wanted to kick Cesnek. This year they'll have to go at Cunha," Gettler said. "Cesnek and Hanks can be more free."

Gettler also will have Cesnek, a right-footer, playing on right wing. He will be defended primarily by right-footed left backs, usually one of a team's weakest links, which will be a tremendous advantage for him. Senior Louis Hollmeyer and freshman Chris Meltzer round out the attackmen.

So they will probably score — maybe a lot. But the defense will be sound as well. In the midfield will be junior Peter McEvoy, a tri-captain who Gettler says has matured greatly and grown into a leader. Flanking him will be senior Bill Kousmanidis and sophomore Brett Anthony. Other candidates include senior Doug Karet and sophomores Tom Novajasky and Kevin Perna.

Leading the way on defense is senior tri-captain Tom Skiba at sweeper. Last year Skiba moved to midfield to allow McCormick to play sweeper, but he is back to where he played and played well during his first two seasons.

"He's real happy to be back, to run the team defensively," Gettler said. "He should prove to be a real leader."

Joining Skiba will be Dan Lawrence, a sophomore whom Gettler felt was his most consistent player last year, and sophomore Darren Stone, who also developed well in the off-season.

The right back slot is between seniors Gael Sullivan and Evan Buxner and junior Matt Bearce. Buxner may also switch with Stone at the left back position.

In goal, it is still a tossup between junior Brett Shumsky (2-1, 0.96 goals against average with two shutouts), sophomore Jon Gruber and freshman Steve Armenti. "All three are really close competing for the spot," Gettler said.

Gettler feels experience will be his team's best virtue this year, and that it will be a much-improved squad from last year.

"We should be really exciting. We'll get a lot of goals, and the defense — I can't believe it's not going to be better," Gettler said. "This is a good group — they've got good chemistry, they're upbeat and they work well."

Last year the team scored 26 goals and allowed 19 in 18 games. Gettler would like to improve on that ratio,

Women's soccer takes on youthful look

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

When one takes a glance at the roster of the University of Massachusetts' women's soccer team, one must immediately think 'rebuilding' year for coach Jim Rudy. After all, his team is loaded with plenty of freshmen and not enough seniors.

And he did lose Michelle Powers and Beth Roundtree, two of his top four scorers, from last year's 14-3-1 club that managed less than two goals per game last season. And add the fact that four-year mainstay Carla DeSantis will not be guarding the UMass net, and the 1989 season could mean a monstrous split-headache for Rudy.

But he sees a brighter picture. "I really dislike the word 'rebuilding' - I think it's more of a result from poor planning," said Rudy, only in his second year here at Amherst. In his first recruiting season here at UMass, Rudy signed eight impact freshmen who will add a new look to the Minutewomen this year. "This year we recruited a lot of speed and fighting power, something we lacked last year," said Rudy.

This preseason has been filled with intense drilling and intrasquad games, which has resulted in a lot of nagging injuries. "The injuries are scaring me because I can't look at any specifics yet," said Rudy. "My concern right now is going on the field September 9th [against Virginia in the season home opener] with my best eleven."

One of the key positions to fill no doubt will be goalkeeper, voided by the graduation of DeSantis. One of Rudy's blue-chip freshmen, Skye Eddy, will be looking to fill the pair of shoes left by the perennial All-American. A native of Reston, VA, Eddy played for the East squad in the National Sports Festival this past spring. Rudy says, "Skye's strength is that she has no poor areas in her game."

Her competition will be senior Mary Curtis, who saw limited action as DeSantis' backup. She has improved vastly from last year, losing 15 pounds and played well in offseason competitions. "She has trained very hard to change her stature and position on this team," said Rudy.

Rudy has not yet decided on who will be his No. 1 goalie, but he said, "Both are going to get some time," said Rudy. "The No. 2 will get more time [as compared to last year] because of the equality I see right now." Rudy says the key factors in his final decision will be which goalie can sustain the highest level of play the longest and which goalie is the hottest when decision time comes.

Rudy feels he can win with either goalie but he is worried about the inexperience of the two: Eddy hasn't played in college and Curtis has played very little.

Although he lost two starters, Rudy feels very good about his defenders, with two returning veterans in senior Sarah Szetela and junior Becky Bonzano. Junior Margie Jaede will also contribute heavily to this year's defensive effort after a huge improvement during last year's offseason. Super-quick freshmen Holly Hellmuth is projected as the fourth and final starter.

An area that will definitely need shoring up is the offense, which only scored 31 goals in 18 games. Part of the offensive problems that the Minutewomen experienced last year could be attributed to adjusting to a new head coach. Rudy says, "The girls are understanding my system and terminology better and should be a better team tactically."

As far as specific areas that need to be shored up are restarts after a stoppage in play and finishing off plays. Rudy said the team definitely worked on improving this during last season, but the results were simply not there. This year he will simplify the system to help make the offense more efficient.

Finishing plays was hard for a team that really lacked the firepower. To solve that dilemma, Rudy signed two of the best offensive high school scorers available, Kim Eynard and Lee Anne Swartz, and moved Sue Gaudette from defense to a forward position.

Eynard, who holds the national high school scoring record with 162 goals in 5 years, is skilled at scoring with both feet and Swartz has a lot of the missing speed and quickness from last year's offense. About Eynard, Rudy says, "Kim Eynard's

Volleyball prepares for rebuilding year

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

Head coach Carol Ford admits this year will be a "rebuilding year" for the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team after losing five of six starters, but she will not use her club's youth and inexperience as an excuse. Instead, she is being optimistic about her team's chances.

"The girls are young, and they have a lot to learn," says Ford. "But I couldn't ask for anymore of them in practice. I don't have a lot of numbers, but I do have quality. I'll be working and pushing them in practice, but I think being positive is going to help."

The goal of this team will be to finish in the top 6 in the Atlantic-10 Conference in order to qualify for postseason play, and apparently the rest of the league feels they can do it, according to the A-10's preseason poll. UMass was expected to finish sixth, behind Penn State, Rhode Island, Temple, West Virginia, and George Washington. They were only ranked ahead of Rutgers, St. Bonaventure, and Duquense. In the preseason, Ford's restructuring of the team has been helped by a good crop of newcomers and also with the return of some old faces.

Joy Gameiner, a sophomore transfer from Virginia Commonwealth, should be able to take away some of the strain due to the loss of Second Team All-Conference middle blocker Barbara Meehan and Juliet Primer. Ford says, "Joy's a really nice player, but her back's limited her play. When she's back to full strength, she's really going to help us in the middle."

Two freshmen, Rachel Bredmeier and Sharon Panoff, are also going to contribute to the middle. Bredmeier combines her 6-foot-1 height and long arms for some strong blocking and Ford describes Panoff as 'having a really nice arm swing and quick wrists."

Despite the loss of Julia Smith, the outside hitting position is perhaps the team's strength with the only returning starter, Nancy Sullivan. The junior has been named the team captain and is expected to carry a big load of the offense along with Juliet Santiago, whom Ford feels is the team's best all-around hitter. Santiago missed last year while studying abroad. Freshmen Susan Richardson and Karen Horlbeck will add depth to the position.

The team lost both its experienced setters, Karen Ferguson and Ann Marie Larese. Ferguson, a Second-Team All-Conference selection, left the team and Larese graduated. The No. 1 setter on the depth charts is sophomore Kelly Ramsey, who saw most of her time in the back row last year.

Fighting it out for the setter from the back row will be sophomore Ann DeSwartz and senior Karen Liss. Ford says, "Ann is a back row specialist who set in high school. She's quick and will be a key to the defense." Liss, a lefty setter, is making a comeback after leaving the team her freshmen year.

With a change in personnel comes a change in the style of play. Ford says, "What we're aiming for is to start out simple offensively. We'll also work hard on defense to keep the ball off the floor." She will limit her offense to basically high sets and no fancy combinations, but at some point in the season, Ford will probably be forced to add some of the old tricks into the offensive playbook.

That point in the season will probably be in October, where the Minutewomen will have to survive six straight matches on the road before coming back to the comfortable confines of Totman Gym. Coincidentally, that is also when the bulk of the Atlantic-10 schedule takes place.

However, the off-the-court commitment might be hardest thing for the players to deal with. Ford explains, "The toughest part of the season is always during midterm exams. We try to help them prepare academically and giving them occasional days off.

"It definitely had a factor in determining our finish last year. We had a big win over West Virginia but we fell apart after that, losing to Temple and Rutgers.

"Hopefully we'll be plateauing at the point. Last year, we kept on going up to West Virginia, then we went straight down, losing our next five."

During this turbulent time, this young Minutewomen team will have to gel together if they are to finish in the top 6 and qualify for the Atlantic-10 playoffs again. "Our chemistry is excellent based on what we've seen," said Ford. "The players all get along with each other and are very supportive of each other. The key to our success will be working together as a unit."

Cross country teams cope with big losses

• Key to be "bunching" for women

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Three weeks ago, Julie LaFreniere was beaming with excitement in anticipation of her team's upcoming campaign. But now the University of Massachusetts women's cross country coach is a little bewildered because of a recent turn of events.

Two of last year's top harriers will not return this season, not because they graduated. Shoot, they were only freshmen. Precious Hill may never be back and Amy St. Pierre? Well, her collegiate running career is on hold for now because of academic reasons.

"I think she (Hill) is really confused," LaFreniere said. "She said she doesn't enjoy running like she used to and I think she was kind of struggling with school. She was eligible but I think she just found it difficult...I don't know if she'll ever come back to school or not."

St. Pierre will not return because the NCAA has ruled her ineligible. St. Pierre does not have the 24 credits necessary to compete in her sophomore year. She withdrew from the University over the fall semester of last year for medical reasons and did not complete a full schedule of classes. However, her withdrawal was past an NCAA deadline.

"She's got to redshirt," LaFreniere. "She should be back in February but for this season it's unheard of."

The loss will be felt heavily. Hill was the Minutewomen's lead runner last season in her first year. She broke a UMass mark in the indoor 3000-meters with a 9:52.1. St. Pierre broke the outdoor school record in the 10,000-meter event with a 37:47.64.

"It'll be pretty devastating," LaFreniere said. "We'll still have a good program, but you need experience and both Amy and Precious have outstanding talent. We would have had a much tighter pack with those four (Hill, St. Pierre, Shana Smith, Laura Lavallee). Precious had outstanding ability. There aren't a lot of people with her ability."

Hill and St. Pierre were part of a large freshmen class that LaFreniere recruited last year. If Hill is gone for good, it will be a big loss for the Minutewomen. But, life goes on and LaFreniere has had another big recruiting year.

"We're going to be hurting without them (Hill and St. Pierre), but we also have freshmen coming in that can step right into the top five too."

Which can only have LaFreniere thinking about what could have been.

"It would have been nice to see those four together and then the two outstanding freshmen coming in added to that," LaFreniere said. "Where as now where their going to come in and be a little higher up in the team then they would have been."

But what will be?

"These kids have a lot of strength and ability and they're mentally tough," LaFreniere said. "They'll pull through."

Hill was the exception on this team. The enthusiasm and dedication that each runner has brought to each practice and meet is as high as LaFreniere can ask for.

"They want to run," LaFreniere said. "They work hard. I can't say enough for their dedication. They love cross country. Most of these distance runners, their favorite season will be cross country. Right now (Aug. 28), Amy St. Pierre does not know she can't run and I've got to call her. She is going to be devastated. She is going to be so upset. I know it."

Senior captain Shana Smith can run and over the past two years has won the team Most Valuable Player award. With the loss of St. Pierre and Hill, Smith suddenly becomes more valuable than ever.

"I think she'll do a great job," LaFreniere said. "I think cross country is probably her best sport. I think when she was a freshman she was really good at half-mile and mile and then her sophomore year was the first year she came out for cross country. And she didn't really know what she was doing in the beginning. But she is such a strong competitor. . . She goes out with

• Men give freshmen an early call

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's track team is like a 1989 Chevy that has been driven about 6,000 miles. The car is still brand new but it is time for a tune-up and oil change.

The ride that the Minutemen took over the past year was over some rough terrain and a few spark plugs were damaged in the process. But UMass coach Ken O'Brien is not planning to fix his engine with used parts. He's got some brand new merchandise fresh off the assembly line which he hopes will take up some of the slack left by the absence of Joe Milette and Gerry Squires, who will sit out this season recovering from knee injuries.

Names such as Darren James, Pat Reed, Mike Davis, and Matt Simon may show up on the varsity traveling roster early on in the season. Those four freshmen may be the parts that make the Minutemen reach the speed limit this year.

"The difference this year will be that we might have to throw some of the freshman into competition a little sooner than we normally do," O'Brien said, shortly after receiving a call that another of his top runners, senior Tom Degnan would not be returning this year. Degnan had been working a hectic schedule over the summer in a high altitude area as part of his Forestry major and was unable to fit in any serious training.

"Generally in the past what I've done is to bring the freshmen around very, very slowly," O'Brien said. "In the past, they've been icing on the cake. This year, they'll be more of an integral part."

O'Brien said that this is one of the top three freshmen classes he has recruited in his 21 years at UMass. Reed, who finished second at the Massachusetts state high school championships last fall, may be a find.

"If he has a good freshman season, he could surprise a lot of people because I don't think people have seen him at his fullest," O'Brien said.

Davis won the Vermont state cross country title and was fourth at the New England meet behind three runners that O'Brien said were among the finest in the nation. Simon boasts a 4:14 mile to his credit. O'Brien feels that James was a steal. The Danvers native was a late bloomer and did not peak for St. Johns prep until the spring of his senior year when he was second in the state in the outdoor two-mile. A fine crop. But freshmen cannot carry a team. Not very far anyway.

"We do have four good upper class kids to work with so if the freshmen kids come around, we could be a strong team," O'Brien said. "But going into the season, I think we have some question marks."

One question mark is depth.

"We've got three strong kids that we can count on in the front but we're not as deep as we have been in the past," O'Brien said. We've gone into seasons in the past with seven or eight kids and only needing five. So we've got a leeway of three."

Those three strong veterans O'Brien is talking about are Art Smith, Herb Heffner, and Jon Corso. O'Brien will look to them to lead the team, consistently.

"I think those three kids are about even," O'Brien said. "I think Art Smith had the edge last year. He was the top runner of those three. But I think Herb and Jon Corso have done a real lot to improve themselves. I have been very impressed with the tremendous improvement of Herb Heffner and Jon Corso over the last year.

They had tremendous nine-month seasons. I really feel as though they are going to surprise a lot of people in cross country.

"I feel as though we have no margin of error. So when you're working with a team

Water polo shoots for best season ever

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Russ Yarworth is known for buildng his men's swimming program from the bottom up, to the point where the Minutemen are now three-time defending New England champions.

Now he is trying to do the same with his water polo team. In its third year of varsity competition, Yarworth believes his 1989 squad is ready to challenge as one of the top teams in New England and on the East Coast.

The Minutemen lost only two players, including second-leading scorer Eric Bebchick, from last year's team and have a core of young players who have developed and matured in the team's first two years of varsity play. With that experience behind them, now is the time to make some noise, Yarworth says.

"Last year we were able to use the excuse of being a young team," Yarworth said. "We lost only two players and I don't think that upset the team chemistry at all. This year we've got to stop being a team of potential and turn into a team that's here."

"Here" means ready to open some eyes around the region, to make a case for UMass being one of the top teams around. That is the goal for Yarworth and his troops.

"We want to finish in the top two in New England and to qualify for the Easterns," Yarworth said. "We have a chance to be considered one of the top teams in the East, and we have the ability to do that."

Last year the Minutemen were ranked third in New England and ninth in the East after a 13-9 campaign. Yarworth feels this year's team is better than the one he had last year, so it's not too hard to figure out. It can be done.

The cast is there to perform the script. Leading the way is junior Jon Miller, a first team All-New England last year and team MVP. Miller topped the Minutemen in goals (47), assists (19) and steals (47).

"I'm pleased to have Jon Miller back," Yarworth said. "He's not a power player, but he's always in the right place, does the right thing and gives 100 percent all the time."

Yarworth particularly likes Miller's versatility, which will have him seeing time at several positions this year.

"He'll be a floater," Yarworth said. "He'll play hole, he'll play defensive hole, do some driving. He'll be all over the place."

Returning as offensive hole setters are senior G.T. Ladd and junior Alex Yalensky. Ladd is one of Yarworth's ace swimmers, while Yalensky should be improved after a hip injury slowed him down for much of last season.

Another of Yarworth's swimming stars is senior Brian McIver, who will be on defense. He will be joined by Scott DeLuca, whom Yarworth expects to greatly improved from last year.

Yarworth will look to sophomore Adam Feldman to pick up some of the slack left by Bebchick's graduation. Feldman, like Bebchick is a southpaw.

A couple of new faces will be in goal in sophomore Todd Larson and redshirt freshman Carl Johnson. These two have allowed Yarworth to move senior Pete Koback, last year's netminder, "out into the field."

"I have confidence in my two underclassmen," Yarworth said. "Between them we'll have one of the strongest goaltending crews in New England."

Another player who will have an impact is senior Mike Melanson. Yarworth has seen him develop steadily every year and is ready to give him some good playing time.

"This is his year to do it," Yarworth said.

He also has a solid freshman class in Scott Reed, Jay Deluso and Bill Pendergast. Reed, a junior national All-American, is expected to start right away with Deluso and Pendergast seeing spot action.

"Reed is a good swimmer, a real smooth player," Yarworth said. "He should step right in and give us good speed."

Yarworth feels this is the best preseason his team has ever had, and that it will be ready to go for the season opener on Sept. 16 at the Eastern Varsity Tournament at Harvard.

"This is the first year we've had this long a preseason. We'll be in better shape and better prepared strategically," Yarworth said. "I'm looking forward to it being a real advantage."

Yarworth still considers teams like Brown and Navy to be out of reach, but feels that the Minutemen can compete on a level with anyone else in the East.

"Realistically I'd like to see us in the top eight in the East. But it's not impossible to reach the top five if we have a great season," Yarworth said. "The goals are there. It's a short, quick, hard season."

The Minutemen will also be participating in the Natonal Invitational at Brown University and tournaments at Fordham and MIT, as well as another Eastern Varsity Tournament at Navy. They will also be playing one "home" match, when they face Boston College at Amherst College on Oct. 27.

With the team he has, Yarworth believes that they can tackle this schedule and come away with the best UMass water polo season ever.

"I'm confident we've got the most talent we've ever had," he said. "Now it's talent with experience. They can only held back by their emotions and approach. We want a more calm, collected approach to the game, a more mature attitude. I think we can go a long way."

UMass alums fare well in pro ranks

Dwyer gets tryout with football Cardinals; four more baseball players jump to minors

Former All-American defensive tackle Mike Dwyer is hoping to catch on with the NFL's Phoenix Cardinals.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The list of former University of Massachusetts athletes in professional sports grew over the summer, as three baseball players were selected in the annual Major League Baseball draft and a former football player made a serious bid to hook on with a National Football League club.

As of press time, Mike Dwyer, a 1986 graduate of UMass, was still on the roster of the Phoenix Cardinals in training camp. Dwyer, a former Division I-AA All-American at defensive tackle, played for the Dallas Cowboys during the 1987 players' strike and was named defensive player-of-the-game for the Cowboys' first strike game.

According to Greg Parenchek, publicity director for the team, Dwyer made to cut down to 60 players, but whether he will be on the final 47-man roster remains to be seen.

"Anytime you bring a free agent into camp, his chances are slim," Parenchek said. "But he played well in Dallas during the strike. He's up against a few veterans and some draft picks."

Dwyer is one of 19 former Minutemen to have played professional football in either the NFL, the American Football League or the United States Football League.

Two members of the 1988 Minutemen, tailback Kevin Smellie and cornerback Andrew Thomas, were drafted by the Saskatchewan Roughriders of the Canadian Football League. But neither have signed yet, according to a Roughrider team spokesperson.

On the baseball side, this year's Minuteman team saw three players drafted and another sign as a free agent, bringing the total to nine players over the past two seasons.

The most notable is sophomore pitcher Brian Conroy. A transfer from Northeastern University, Conroy pitched one season for UMass before being selected by the Boston Red Sox. He started out with the organization's rookie team in the Gulf Coast League, posting a 4-2 record and a 2.25 earned run average in seven games. He allowed only 33 hits and nine walks in 44 innings while striking out 31, enough to earn a quick promotion to Winter Haven of the Florida State League.

Paul Ciaglo, another transfer from Springfield College, pitched one season and was drafted by the Montreal Expos (the Expos' red, white and blue logo now adorns the Ciaglo barn on Route 9 in Hadley, underneath the "Hopkins 1985 State Champions" message.)

Ciaglo pitched in four games for Jamestown of the Class A New York-Penn League, going 0-2 with a 4.19 ERA before developing tendinitis in his pitching arm.

Also in the New York-Penn League is Dave Telgheder, a senior who was drafted by the New York Mets. Telgheder has been pitching just up the road in Pittsfield, where he has gone 1-2 with a 2.91 ERA in seven games. A fourth UM pitcher, senior Don Strange, signed with the Atlanta Braves as a free agent. He is playing for Pulaski of the Appalachian League, where he is 1-0 with a 3.38 ERA in 15 relief appearances.

Last season, five Minutemen made the jump to the pros. Leading the way is shortstop Gary Disarcina, who is making a quick climb to the "show." Disarcina has spent all of 1989 with Midland of the Double-A Texas League, where he is batting .298 with four home runs and 43 runs batted in and a team-high nine stolen bases.

Making a big turnaround was pitcher Steve Allen, who was a starter in Rookie ball last year in Butte, MT but has been switched to a reliever this year. Now pitching for Gastonia (A, South Atlantic League), he is 4-1 with a 2.47 ERA and three saves in 37 games, all in relief. He has struck out 59 in 69 innings while giving up just 54 hits.

Another player who made a switch is Mike Owens. Last year with the Phillies' rookie team he had a poor season as a pitcher. He has since been switched to first base and is hitting .243 with six home runs for Batavia of the New York-Penn League.

Pitching with the Prince William Cannons of the Carolina League is Ken Greer, who sports a 5-3 record and a 4.16 ERA in 22 games. Greer has walked just 12 batters in 80 innings.

Moving to soccer, 1988 grad Andy Bing played for the Boston Bolts of the American Soocer League. Bing, who led the team in scoring last year, played in only eight games this year and didn't score any points as the Bolts advanced to the championship series, losing in a tiebreaker to the Fort Lauderdale Strikers.

because I didn't know what the next two years would be like, I think I just sort of got over each obstacle as it came."

But during those two years, Derwin got caught up in the deep tradition of UMass field hockey.

Iwas able to go on all their trips," Derwin said. I filmed for the team. I became part of the UMass field hockey team even though I didn't play. And I think that spurned my interest to continue pushing so I would get a chance to play again."

Those two seasons were also productive one for Derwin.

"I traveled with the team during that two year period and learned a tremendous amount of hockey even though I wasn't playing. I know I progressed mentally as a player much beyond where I left off in high school. So when I started to play again, it was a matter of catching my physicall skills up to what I knew about the game."

Derwin knows a lot about the game. And after last December she has learned a lot more.

In case you missed it over the summer . . .

Softball, men's lacrosse reach national playoffs; several athletes receive postseason honors

If you were one of the select many who got out of here as soon as possible after finals in May, you probably missed a few things that went on in the late spring and summer around campus.

The University of Massachusetts softball team, coming off its Atlantic 10 championship victory, qualified for the Eastern regional tournament of the NCAA playoffs, and UMass was also selected to host the three-team tourney.

Connecticut and Oregon joined UMass in the double-elimination event at Totman Field. The Minutewomen dropped their opening game against UConn, and then fell into the loser's bracket where they were eliminated later that day by Oregon. Oregon bounced back to beat Connecticut in consecutive games to win the championship.

The men's lacrosse team also qualified for postseason play and hosted Cornell University in a first-round game at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Shrugging off a loss to Cornell earlier in the season, the Gorillas put on an impressive show to take a 16-7 win.

Next was a quarterfinal match with Johns Hopkins in Baltimore. UMass stayed close throughout the first half before a stiff Bluejay defense wore the Gorillas down. JHU wound up with a 9-4 win, and advanced all the way to the championship game before dropping a 13-12 squeaker to Syracuse.

But the honors rolled in for members of the Gorillas and several other teams. Coming off a 13-3 season, UMass coach Dick Garber was named national Division I Coach-of-the-Year by the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association. Garber is also a member of the Lacrosse Hall of Fame.

Senior goalkeeper Sal LoCascio was named Most Valuable Player of the team and was also tabbed as New England Player-of-the-Year, first team All-New England goalie and a second team All-American. He also participated in the North-South All-Star game at Johns Hopkins along with senior attack Paul Ganci.

Joining LoCascio on the All-New England were senior defenseman Adam Rodell, junior midfielder Tim Soudan and sophomore attack Jim McAleavey on the first team, and freshman defenseman Rick Mullins, junior midfielder Rob Codignotto, senior midfielder Kris Cuozzo, Ganci and junior attack Scott Hiller on the second team.

Soudan was also a second team All-American, while McAleavey was named third team and Hiller an honorable mention.

Mullins and defenseman Mario Lopez were named team rookies-of-the-year and junior midfielder Marc Feinberg received the coach's award. Hiller, Soudan and Feinberg were tabbed as tri-captains for the 1990 squad.

In softball, freshman pitcher Holly Aprile was named first team All-Northeast, as was senior outfielder Barbara Meehan. Catcher Cherie DellAnno was selected for the second team. Meehan was named MVP of the team.

Senior attack Cathy Fuhrman was a first team All-Region and second team All-American for the women's lacrosse team, and junior attack Sue Murphy was an honorable mention All-Region. Fuhrman was MVP of the team, while Murphy and junior attack Ann King were named co-captains for 1990.

Senior Carla DeSantis captured the ECAC javelin championship with a toss of 153 feet, 1 inch in women's track. Freshman sprinter Lee Ann Ambrose was selected team MVP.

Other team MVPs included: baseball — junior pitcher Paul Ciaglo and senior outfielder Drew Seccafico; men's tennis — senior Brian Gable; women's tennis — freshman Gail Girasella; men's track — senior Reinardo Flores. Senior pitcher Dave Telgheder also received the anuual Dennis DellaPiana Award for determination and sportsmanship in baseball.

In other news, assistant men's basketball coach Roger McCready resigned to take a similar position at the University of Maryland. McCready will coach under Gary Williams, the new Terrapin coach whom he played for when both were at Boston College.

As of press time, UMass coach John Calipari had recommended that James Flint be hired to replace McCready.

The summer also saw the retirement of longtime UMass trainer Vic Keedy. James Laughnane, a member of the UMass athletic training staff for 24 years, was named to replace Keedy, who had been head trainer for the past 40 years.

the best of them. She'll probably be in the top ten in New England."

Smith can't do it all by herself though. It takes seven high places to win a meet. One of those places may be taken up by junior Laura LaVallee.

She just wandered over to LaFreniere's office from the field hockey team last year and in her first cross country season ever became a top-three runner for the varsity .

She has one achilles heel though which LaFreniere plans to iron out as soon as possible. LaFreniere spotted the problem at the New England Championships last year.

"At the New England Championships, Laura didn't run as well as she could have last year," LaFreniere said. "When it came time to run for the downhill running of the course which was the last mile, she fell apart. She was afraid to run downhill. So we're going to take care of that the beginning part of this year. She's a great uphill runner. Now I got to make her into a great downhill runner.

"She's pretty determined. She knows. She's a real team person. And I know she'll step right in there. She's very supportive. She's a great person to have. I'm not worried about her. She'll do a great job."

Junior Cathy Crocker also figures into UMass' lucky seven. . . if she stays healthy.

"She (Crocker), consistently ran sixth for us last year," LaFreniere said. "The key for Cathy's success is keeping her healthy. She tends to fall apart very easy. She'll have a knee problem or a leg problem. She's very delicate."

Perhaps her record as a torrid trainer is one reason why Crocker has been injury plagued. But she apparently only knows one way to approach a workout or meet and that is all out.

"She's the type of kid that gives you 150 percent every time she steps out there and she trains hard in the workouts," LaFreniere said. "She'll push people in the workouts."

Anna Montuori is another veteran that must stay injury-free. Like Crocker, she has also had a history of injuries. And sometimes she has hid them so she could keep on running (more evidence of that enthusiasm and dedication). But LaFreniere hopes Montuori has nothing to hide in the coming months.

Throw in Kathy Holt and Michelle St. Laurent to the varsity and the roster becomes a little deeper.

A couple of brand new runners also may contribute in the not too distant future when they arrive in Amherst on Labor Day weekend to suit up for the Minutwomen. They are Becky Johnson and Maureen Meldrim, both freshmen, who were among New York's finest to offer.

Johnson, from East Greenbush, N.Y., finished fourth at the New York State Federation Cross Country Championships last year. Meldrim, from Glenmont, N.Y., won her sectional meet for Clarence High School the last three years.

"I know the two freshmen coming in are extremely dedicated," LaFreniere said. "I know they've been doing those workouts I sent them. I send freshmen, workouts, and returning members, workouts. These two freshmen coming in didn't do the freshmen workouts, they did the returning workouts because I knew their backgrounds and I knew they could handle that."

How many points will all these runners add up to though, in this, the Minutewomen's first season in the Atlantic 10 Conference?

"Shana and Laura are outstanding runners," LaFreniere said. "If we can get two freshmen up there with any of the returning people, I think our key will be bunching, keeping our time from the first runner to the fifth runner as small as possible."

Which is a different strategy than in years past.

"What really helps you sometimes in a big meet is having an outstanding runner like Precious up front with a very low number and then bunching the rest of them up. Well, we're not going to have that out there. So everybody is just going to have to run harder and stay closer together."

It will be tough for the Minutewomen to stay close to the Providences or Yales. It was not too long ago that LaFreniere felt her squad had a good shot of cracking the top five teams in New England (after finishing sixth last year) and beating Boston College for the first time in eight years. But both of those goals are up in the air at the present moment.

"It will be interesting to see how we do against them (BC)," LaFreniere said. "When I thought I had Precious and Amy, I pretty much felt that we were going to be a better team than them. Now, I'm not sure where we'll be.

Oh, it could have been a Precious season.

Young tennis team courts most depth in years

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Edwin Gentzler just sits back in his chair, calmly. He doesn't have a multi-million dollar tennis facility like the University of Vermont does. He doesn't have one scholarship to lure recruits to his school like the University of Hartford, which has four.

But Gentzler doesn't complain. In fact, his women's team whipped both those schools last year including a win in Vermont's own complex. He is looking forward to this year.

'I'm very optimistic about the season because we only lost one senior," Gentzler said. "Everyone else is back. We have a very young team. This will be the strongest team that we've fielded from one through six. We have better depth than we've ever had."

And he must hope that it is a little stronger than last year's team which finished seventh in the Atlantic 10 Tournament at the end of the year. That team was 4-6 in spring dual meets but will return most of the same squad, including six letterwinners.

"It's going to be the best team that UMass had fielded in years," Gentzler said. "We play a difficult schedule, but we'll be competitive."

How can he say that? Considering the same people will be playing that could not surpass the .500 plateau, the plateau of excellence in the American League East if you may. Well, it's very simple really.

A young team has had a year of experience under its belt and though he has no scholarships, Gentzler has brought in a few top notch rookies.

"There's clearly room for improvement. We have a great group of young kids with good attitudes," Gentzler said. "Last year, we had a great season, upsetting teams that we didn't even belong on the court with."

The top seed returnee is junior captain Maura Foley. Foley has had some impressive performances over the past few years which includes a win at the Massachusetts Association of Interscholastic Athletics for Women Tournament two years ago.

"I expect her to provide leadership, a winning attitude, and a dedicated work ethic in practices," Gentzler said.

One reason that Gentzler believes he has his deepest team in the three years that he has coached at UMass is that for the first time, he has two doubles teams coming back.

Kere Eddy and Gail Girasella will be one of those teams and Shizuko Yamasaki teamed with Vanessa Kirchner will be the other.

Rose: Hall of Fame or Hall of Shame

Despite the recent agreement reached by former Cincinnati Reds manager Pete Rose and Major League Baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti, the final and perhaps most important chapter in this saga is yet to be written.

On August 24, Rose accepted a lifetime banishment from baseball, saying that "the settlement is fair." This will at least end the legal portion of the battle. However, there is an extremely important related issue that we will soon have to confront.

John Patrick Musulin

In 1992, Pete Rose's name will be included on the ballot for induction into the Baseball Hall of Fame. At that time, the 450 members of the Baseball Writers' Association will decide whether or not he is worthy of receiving the sport's highest honor.

If the issue were merely one of statistics and a player's accomplishments on the field, the vote would probably be unanimously in favor of Rose's induction. However, many believe there is more to the issue than mere numbers. The image of Major League Baseball is at stake and many people are concerned that it may suffer if Rose is inducted.

Throughout his 24-year career, Rose has been a hero and a role model to millions of Americans. His hard-nosed, aggressive style of play earned him the nickname "Charlie Hustle." He was the epitome of American idealism, both in athletics and life: all-out effort for victory.

In our society, we tend to elevate our athletes and entertainers to a superhuman level. We expect them to be perfect in every way, as if they were gods.

But who cn blame us? We have no common mythology to enjoy. Major religious leaders are caught with their pants down every other day. Dozens of major political figures, including the past two presidents, have been accused of lying to Congress, as well as the American people. Who can we trust? Who can we look up to?

Let's face it; we are a country starving for heroes. Perhaps this is why we place such high expectations on our athletes.

Baseball is at the core of our culture, even more so than other sports. As Giamatti stated, in regard to the additional responsibility that Major League Baseball assumes, "But this one, because it is so much a part of our history as a people and because it has such a purchase on our national soul, has an obligation to the people for whom it is played — fans and the well-wishers in the millions — to strive for excellence in all things and to promote the highest ideals."

I feel sorry for Pete Rose. He has a problem with gambling. But just because he is not perfect, should he be condemned? Should a lifetime of stellar, athletic performance be cancelled out by a defect in character? Or should a player's personal activities be separated from his on-the-field performance?

It is indeed a critical issue. If Rose is inducted, how will this be interpreted by the American public, especially the young and impressionable. Will it say, "It's okay to break the rules, just deny everything"?

And yet, if the verdict of the Baseball Writers' Association proves to be an extension of Giamatti's decision, will it be fair and just, or will it be a modern day lynching, resulting from our uncontrolled and unsympathetic fanaticism?

I want my children to know of the great athletic achievements of Pete Rose. However, i don't want to explain how a person could receive the highest honor from the same sport from which he is banned forever.

The Baseball Writers' Association has a tough decision to make. It will be very important, because it will be an extension of the American value system, a reflection of what we feel is important and right. Perhaps in a society as dynamic and challenging as our own, we should all think about it.

indeed moved to the front of the line.

"There is a favorite in my heart," Reid said. "(Baldacci)'s been here five years, and he's respectful and a hard worker. I wanted to switch him to tight end last year so he could play, but he wouldn't do it."

Baldacci is bigger than all the others, something that makes him suitable for a drop-back style of game.

"I'm strongest in drop-back, I-formation and split back," Baldacci said. "Throwing is what I do best. But we've been working on the option and I feel good about that."

But another quarterback, a total afterthought entering camp, has suddenly thrust himself right into the picture. He is Gary Wilkos, a sophomore from Staten Island, NY. Wilkos rebounded from a poor spring camp and has opened a lot of eyes. He also is smaller and quicker than Baldacci, Flutie-esque qualities that may make him the choice if option is what you desire.

"Gary Wilkos came back in excellent shape, and he's got the skills," Reid said. "He was kind of an afterthought. He didn't do well in the spring but he showed the skills."

Another option contender is Tom Fasano. A sophomore from Bergenfield, NJ, he led his high school team to consecutive state championships.

"Tom Fasano ran the option beautifully in spring," Reid said. "I'd feel comfortable with him in there."

"I think I'm an option quarterback," Fasano said. "Roger and Paul (Tornatore) throw real well. It'll be tough. Right now I'm No. 3, but I've got to keep an open mind and keep trying."

Tornatore, also a sophomore from Ridgewood, NJ, was No. 2 on the depth chart before the lineup juggling. Reid cites him for having a strong arm, with similar qualities as Baldacci.

As an added name to the list, remember Jim Thompson, a freshman who played halfback at Minnechaug HS of Wilbraham. Thompson will probably be redshirted this year, but his pure athletic ability has opened a lot of eyes around camp.

"As soon as he learns the system he's gonna be an awesome player," Reid said. "If there's a guy like Palazzi, it's him. We look at him as a guy we can use in the future. I'm high on him."

The team scrimmaged again last Friday, and there may be a definite starter by this time. The Minutemen open the '89 season Saturday against James Madison at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

"Nobody took two giant steps forward in the spring. There were a lot of small steps," Reid said. "If someone comes forward, we will work hard to get him ready."

like that, what you almost have to count on is that the people who aren't supposed to be question marks can't afford to have a bad day. Smith, Heffner, and Corso, the top three kids coming back, have got to run well."

Heffner, a senior from Holland, Pa., really came on in the spring track season last year, finishing second in the steeplechase at the New England Championships. Corso finished second in the 10,000-meter run at the Eastern Conference Championships.

Smith is another story. After sustaining stress fractures in high school, the junior sat out his freshman year but over the past two years has returned to the form that made him one of the top high school runners in Massachusetts a few years ago. This year Smith is back and as healthy as ever.

"I think this year and next year will be outstanding years for him (Smith)," O'Brien said. "He showed flashes last year, showed flashes the year before. But when you take a real large amount of time off in distance running, sometimes your recovery comes and goes. And after having run now for two good years, I think he's ready to put two good years together."

Two other upperclassmen who O'Brien would like healthy are seniors Joe Livorsi and Jim Chute. Livorsi won the 10,000-meter event at the Easterns last spring. Chute has been plagued with injuries for much of his collegiate cross country career and has seen all his action at the junior varsity level. But O'Brien is hoping he can make the step up to the varsity this fall.

The Minutemen are in a different boat than some of the other top teams in New England. Dartmouth College, who finished fifth in the country at the NCAA's, and Providence College, who finished 12th at that meet, did not lose many of their top runners.

"I think those two teams will be very difficult to dislodge from the first two spots in New England," O'Brien said. "They're virtually intact. Providence has everybody intact plus the two best junior kids last year in Ireland. Dartmouth has everybody back except their first man."

Milette and Squires are planning to come back next year. UMass may be running on fumes for awhile without them, but O'Brien is planning to fill up the tank, with some new runners.

"They fit well together," Gentzler said. "I expect them to develop and improve."

Adding to that depth will be four freshmen, one of which is Elysa Rosenberg from Brooklyn, N.Y. Gentzler has big plans for Rosenberg who he seems to feel is the pick of this litter. Rosenberg competed at a national tournament in California over the summer, and according to Gentzler, was very impressive.

"It will be hard for them (freshmen) to make the starting lineup," Gentzler said. "But I expect them to make the team and give us depth. One (Rosenberg) of them I expect to contribute right away. She should be able to step in and handle the pressure of college tennis."

And they will have to handle Vermont again (Oct. 14), though this time it is on the more conventional yet friendlier upper Boyden courts. Still though, the Minutewomen will have to make a trip to Vermont to envy its tennis center when the New England Championships roll around towards the end of October.

Hartford is also back on the schedule with the Minutewomen to travel there on Sept. 25 for an afternoon date down in Ivan Lendl's home state.

strength is when the chips down, she wants the ball." Gaudette showed her offensive ability by scoring three goals from her defense position, all of which were game-winners.

As far as returning big guns on offense, Rudy has junior April Kater and sophomore Michele Woodside to complement the two freshmen. Kater was the co-scoring champ (with Michelle Powers) with 8 goals and 4 assists for 20 points and Woodside was third on the team with 17 points on 6 goals and 5 assists.

Others who figure to play up front are Tracy Arwood, Kim Montgomery, Robin Runstein, Lisa Mickelson, and Colette Bowler. Arwood, like Gaudette, is a former defender. Montgomery, Runstein, and Bowler were also substitutes last year and Mickelson is a freshman who will grab her share of the scoring.

The Minutewomen's schedule is littered with 12 Top 20 teams among its 18 opponents. UMass will be tested by the likes of Wisconsin (which knocked UMass out of last year's Final Four), Connecticut, North Carolina State, and William and Mary.

As far as any preseason polls, Rudy isn't really concerned about that. "All I care about is when Monday, October 30 [the first day after the season ends] comes," says Rudy. "And I get a phone call saying, 'You're in the playoffs.'" somewhere in the neighborhood of $15, and then je thinks the team will be one to look out for.

"It's one thing to talk, it's another to do," he said. "The goal of this team is to have a winning season and to make the Atlantic 10 playoffs. Then if we get it, we want to win so we can get an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament."

The team barely missed last year, but could move into position this season, especially with the schedule it has. After starting the season with three on the road, the Minutemen return home for nine straight games, including the annual Challenge Cup tournament that will feature Boston University, Delaware and George Washington.

After three more on the road, it's back to Boyden for three to close the regular season. Key games will be the A-10 clashes with Temple, St. Joseph's, Rhode Island and Rutgers.

The team has had its best preseason yet, according to Gettler, something that should make the road just that much smoother.

"We're way ahead of any preseason. Everyone knows what they're doing," Gettler said. "The things we're doing and the shape we're in tactically is the same as it was in the spring. Not many things have changed.

"Our schedule is a boon for us, too," Gettler said. "I can't believe we're not going to have a successful year."

Mrs. Bush receives diploma from Smith

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Barbara Pierce Bush never graduated from college, dropping out of Smith College in 1944 to marry a Yale grad named George.

Forty-five years later, she came back to the all-woman's college to receive a degree.

Mary Maples Dunn, president of Smith, presented Bush, 64, an Honarary Degree of Humane Letters at Smith's 114th Convocation. The convocation, attended by about 3,000 students, faculty and invited guests, was held in the college's indoor track and tennis facility on West Street.

"Smith College is delighted to award to Barbara Bush to recognize her work on behalf of people who are homeless, hungry, handicapped, seriously ill and particularly who are illiterate," Dunn said.

Bush said: "If more people were literate in this country, there would be fewer problems with drugs, dropouts, AIDS . . . and the unemployment rate would be reduced."

Bush began advocating an increase in the US literacy rate when her husband ran for higher political office in 1980. Since then she has done public service announcements, made television appearances and chaired national and local literacy committees.

Bush's speech strayed away from the political and bordered on the esoteric — the audience responding with chants of "Barb, Barb."

"A close supportive family, close friends and a belief in God helped us survive some of life's hardest blows," she said, referring to the death years ago of her four-year-old daughter, Robin, to leukemia.

Bush said she doesn't regret withdrawing from school after a year and a half to marry the president and raise a family because life has taught her "that relationships are the most important thing to anyone at anytime."

She cited her husband's political defeats as learning experiences that could not be acquired in school.

"Defeat can teach humility," she said. "It puts things in a different perspective, and sharpens the sense of humor."

War on drugs leads to new battles

By WALTER R. MEARS
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — In President Bush's renewed war on drugs, there's no political argument about the enemy, the objective or even the weapons — but partisan skirmishes already are flaring over priorities, price and the way to pay for it.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Stripped to essentials, there really is no Republican way to combat the drug menace and no Democratic way. The argument between the parties, which means between the White House and Congress, is over how fast and how much.

And it also is over new taxes. Bush says no; the Democrats say the cost of the drug war means at least maybe.

Political infighting about the war on drugs probably was inevitable. The last campaign, and it may be the common denominator issue in next year's congressional election.

Bush saw it coming. "But those who judge our strategy only by its price tag simply don't understand the problem," he said in his Tuesday night address to the nation. "Let's face it, we've all seen in the past that money alone won't solve some of our toughest problems."

The Bush strategy points to a guns and butter sort of war, although the president said that there would be hard times and high costs ahead. He said he wanted to add $2.2 billion to the war on drugs. In budget terms, all but $716 million already is included in proposals the administration has sent to Congress. The White House would offset that by cutting other programs, one

Bush speech doesn't alter Boston streets

By DANA KENNEDY
The Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — As President Bush was announcing his $7.9 billion anti-drug plan, cocaine sellers and buyers met as usual on Boston's Blue Hill Avenue, exchanging cynicism along with crack.

"It won't make any difference down here," said 21-year-old E.Z. Ty, who interrupted a conversation on a dingy corner to say he sells crack and show off the chrome-plated revolver in his waistband.

"Drugs is very heavy down here. And you know why? McDonald's doesn't pay anything. Cocaine is here to stay. It's not going anywhere."

Related stories, pages 7 and 13.

During the 25 minutes it took Bush to outline the anti-drug campaign on prime-time television Tuesday night, one man was shot and three others arrested for drugs in Boston's Roxbury neighborhood, said police spokeswoman Jill Reilly.

Michael Williams, 25, was sitting on the steps of his apartment building with three at about 9:20 p.m. when a man came up, cocked a pistol and opened fire. Police said the motive for the shooting was unclear, but like most violence in Roxbury, it was probably drug or gang related. Williams was listed in stable condition yesterday at Boston City Hospital.

On Blue Hill Avenue, a desolate string of vacant lots and boarded up storefronts through the heart of Roxbury, two members of the Humboldt Raiders Gang said Bush's plan was pointless.

"I think it's crazy," said 18-year-old

ROTC challenges students in event for Easter Seals

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A student dangled precariously from a rope bridge inches above the campus pond yesterday, his eyes fired with determination to reach the opposite bank.

He struggled to gain his footing but the rope veered off to the side, landing him with a splash into the campus pond, which one onlooker described as "two feet of water and one foot of mud."

Chris Condron, a sophomore, was drenched and muddy but cheerful as he pondered his second failed attempt to complete the Army Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) rope bridge challenge, held annually to benefit Easter Seals.

Officers dressed in army fatigues collected about $125 in donations yesterday from students who attempted the challenge and some from onlookers who were not as daring as they were generous.

"It was fun. I got to walk in the muck," Condron joked. "I didn't mind. That's why I gave them the dollar."

ROTC Captian Brian Cashman, who organized the event, said hundreds of students flocked to the campus pond to watch some 50 men and women participate in the event, which ran from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

"Anybody can do it," he said, adding that agility, not

Add/drop woes continue as students struggle to get into any open courses on campus

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Long lines and short tempers marked the beginning of this semester's add/drop period Tuesday, which some students called the worst registration effort in recent memory.

> "I expected some lines, but not to this extent."
> – Paul Graziano

Vittoria Esile, a senior, said she can only take classes on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays because of her work schedule. A music major, she said she needed a sociology course for a core requirement. After she was told she was still on the waiting list for it, she said, "It's frustrating not being able to get in."

Meanwhile, add/drop lines in physics and biochemistry departments were closed by 4 p.m. yesterday, a half hour earlier than listed in the fall semester's registration notes. According to physics professor William Gerace, who assigned graduate students to work his department's add/drop table, lack of demand for the courses brought the early closing.

After the amount of students wanting to add a course drops significantly, Gerace said, there comes a point when the department no longer needs to keep their table open.

He said students usually do not sign up for physics courses late, unlike humanities courses, adding they might get behind in the work.

In the history department, students had to pick up tickets on Tuesday, and some late arrivals for tickets will have to wait until today to try to pick up courses. John Samaras, a sophomore waiting for a 100-level course, said he lost two classes he signed up for during pre-registration.

He added he expected the long wait for the course. "I remember the lines from last year," he said.

Students in the English department also had to face lines that, at one point, stretched from Bartlett 65, where students were adding and dropping classes, to the doors to the department's offices. Sophomores Michelle Garcia and Lisa Lowe were waiting to sign up for a class to satisfy the Literature requirement for General Education.

"There should be a better pre-registration system," Garcia said. "Our tickets were for 10:45. We didn't get in until 11:45."

Lowe said, "There needs to be some way for us to know what's open. They [the English department] never announced that a section was closed."

TelCom may bring library to dorm TVs

By ROB SIMPSON
Collegian Staff

It is Monday night in the residence hall. A lone light flickers in a dormitory room as a student discovers he has forgotten to include critical information in his extensive research paper — which was due last week.

The solution? He simply dials a phone number and requests some video tapes carrying the information from a reserve on campus. The tapes are quickly transferred to an open channel in his television through a University-wide cable system.

Perhaps this scenario seems too futuristic, but according to Joseph Zannini, director of Housing Services, the technology may become a reality for students next fall.

The University has discussed the possibility with GTE, a communications consulting firm, on the project, which is called "video imagery," for several months.

If the project is activated, the University will become the first institution to adopt this program, Zannini said.

"No one has ever done it before," he said of the video imagery project, which would allow only on-campus students to order videos by telephone.

Video imagery is one facet of TelCom, a $21 million campus-wide project started last spring to bring cable television to residence halls, Zannini said.

As part of the same project, all buildings on campus will receive a new telephone system and access to the University's computer system, he said.

Zannini said the system, which may include a student-run television channel, is expected to greatly enhance the educational opportunities at the University.

"We want to utilize that as an educational tool as well [as for entertainment]," he said. "Students will be able to use it in their academic lives as well as their personal lives."

Professors deal with long lines, faces

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

It's 8 a.m. and you're a professor at the University of Massachusetts about to face a crowd of disgruntled students who have been waiting in line with their add/drop forms since 5 a.m.

You're about to turn and run, when suddenly you see something. Is it a supermarket deli-counter? Is it a raffle?

No, it's UMass' attempt to add order to add/drop lines.

Several academic department secretaries, including those in the English, history, and chemistry departments, handed out tickets this week to students in add/drop lines.

The tickets, which designated students' number in line or assigned times to students to return to the building, were "successful in eliminating the crowds from the hallways," said Professor Roland Sarti, chairperson of the history department.

Professor John Chandler, director of the general chemistry program, said he agreed the tickets helped to smooth out the add/drop process.

"The tickets reduced the hostility when we closed the doors at noon for lunch," he said, because they assured each student their original place in line.

He added that of some 460 students handled by the department this week, only one student grumbled at him.

Sarti said he agreed that students remained calm.

"As far as I can tell, the students are remarkably good-natured," he said. "I saw a lot of glum faces, but that's about it."

Joanna Whitney, a graduate student who helped with anthropology add/drop last year, said she agreed that students are more relaxed this year.

"Last semester there was a lot of frustration, because it was the first hit of the budget cuts," she said. "This year, lines are not as long, and emotions are not as strong."

Sarti said he thought the tickets helped limit the crowds and will be used again next year, but "they do not solve the fundamental problem that we do not have enough spaces in the courses themselves."

The anthropology department suggested a permanent solution to scheduling problems with a sign posted above their table: "Please Don't Get Mad at US Because Classes Are Full — Call Your Legislator!"

SGA leaders out to regain a little respect

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

Furnished with a newly renovated office, the leadership of the Student Government Association plans to inject new life into the organization this semester.

By restructuring the Registered Student Organizations and educating student senators, the recently floundering SGA is hoping to regain student confidence and steer the organization on the road to recovery.

John Dunlap, senate speaker, said he will propose extensive mandatory orientation and briefing for student senators. He said this will help them make more informed decisions when voting on issues in the Senate.

"A lot of people talk about student empowerment," he said. "But they don't understand that along with that empowerment comes responsibility."

As part of revamping the SGA, the accounts of over 70 allegedly defunct RSOs were eliminated by the Student Activities Office.

According to Sue Jean, associate director of SAO, any of these RSOs that file a "reactivation packet" will have their accounts returned to them.

The essence of the plan for restructuring RSOs is the soon to be completed new Chapter 9 of the SGA constitution dealing with student activities regulations.

According to Dunlap, past SGA officers ineptitude in monitoring RSOs and their use of funds culminated in this summer's overhaul. RSOs are funded by the Student Activities Trust Fund, collected from a $107 per student activities fee.

Dunlap said the major changes taking place under Chapter 9 are as follows:

- Voting rights within RSOs will be removed from non-SATF paying members in order to ensure more control for RSO undergraduate members.
- Questions will be answered regarding to what extent religious organizations should be funded.
- A registration committee will replace the registrar as the sole decision-making body regarding questions about RSOs.
- A Student Activities Office appeals board, composed one-half students, will be formed to resolve disagreements between an RSO and the SAO.
- Student conntrolled businesses will be placed in a different category than RSOs to ensure them greater flexibility.
- Every summer RSOs will be made inactive and members will have to file reactivation packets each September. This will help keep track of active RSOs, reducing the possible need for another mass RSO elimination.

Laura Filkins, SGA treasurer, views the changes as the result of years of SGA mismanagement.

"SGA's been in a rut. There has now been an influx of people interested in making things work," she said.

One bicycle totaled; one bicycle stolen

A bicycle was totalled and the driver sustained minor injuries Tuesday after a collision with a car in a parking lot on Governor's Drive, police said.

The car was leaving the lot when the two collided, police said. There was damage to the front fender and windshield. The operator was issued a warning for failure to use care when starting, police said.

In other police reports:

- A victim reported a Royce Union bike stolen Tuesday from a bike rack at the Student Union. The bike was worth $500.
- Police said a license plate was stolen Tuesday from a car parked in Fraternity/Sorority Park.
- A man reported his vehicle was hit in the rear while parked in Lot 22 Tuesday, police said. A note with a phone number of the offending driver proved to be negative, police said.
- A vacuum cleaner was reported stolen Tuesday from a janitor's closet in Dickinson, police said. The vacuum cleaner was valued at $700.
- Mayer A. Goldhagen, 20, was arrested Tuesday near Hampshire Dining Commons for being a minor in possession of alcohol and using false information to obtain a liquor identification card, police said.
- A motorist with two people in the trunk and six people inside the vehicle was stopped Tuesday on Massachusetts Avenue, police said. The operator was cited for driving to endanger, police said.

Mrs. Bush

After the ceremony, the audience was greeted outside by several Smith College students protesting Bush's degree and her political views. They were holding a sign which read, "Life, Liberty and the Right to Choose," referring to a woman's right to have an abortion.

One Smith woman, clad in a plaid nightgown who had just emerged from the ceremony, asked the protesters what the sign meant.

The demonstrators said they didn't think Bush was a worthy recipient of the degree.

"I don't think she represents women's rights," said Katie Shults, a student at the college. "I think they could've picked a more deserving person."

Xandra Castleton, a junior at Smith, agreed. "It was a typical first lady speech. It was all about family, friends and faith. It didn't say anything of substance."

Several students donned white t-shirts that said on the front, "Nancy Reagan, class of 1943 and Barbara Bush, left in 1944 to marry George," and "There must be a better way to get a Smithie in the White House," on the back.

Caroline Foster, a senior at Smith, said, "We wanted to earn it [getting into the White House] rather than to marry into it."

War on drugs

at the Pentagon, the rest on the domestic agenda.

"We can pay for this fight against drugs without raising taxes or adding to the budget deficit," Bush said.

Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware, who delivered the Democrats' televised response, said the Bush plan would wage a limited war, on the cheap. "We don't oppose the president's plan," said Biden, who as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee wields legislative power over major portions of it. "all we want to do is strengthen it."

While the president asked support and commitment of a united, angry America, he did not spell out costs in terms of sacrifice. That word turned up in a public opinion poll conducted as part of the buildup to the drug report. George Gallup Jr. said the survey found a majority of the public ready to accept sacrifices as in wartime, including higher taxes, if necessary to combat drugs.

House Speaker Thomas Foley said the drug war eventually will lead to increasing pressure for a tax increase. Even Rep. Robert H. Michel, the Republican leader, said there might be have to be another look at financing for the program after a year.

That flowed into the debate over the budget, the deficit and the taxes Bush ruled out in every speech of his campaign for the presidency. That continuing struggle may embroil facets of the drug program just as it threatened to snarl the legislation bailing out the shaken savings and loan system.

Bush said Congress should offer leadership and bipartisan support to the strategy it asked the new president to prepare in the first place. "And our citizens deserve cooperation, not competition; a national effort, not a partisan bidding war," he said.

Huckleberry Ross, who wore a fancy sweatsuit and heavy gold medallions. "They ought to go right to Colombia and do something. It won't do any good to get rid of it here. You won't keep the gangs from selling it."

Ross' friend and fellow gang member, Tyrone Stevens, 19, said the Bush administration should provide more educational opportunities for blacks to help keep them away from drugs.

"They say they're going to spend money to fight drugs, but at the same time they're taking money out our public schools,' said Stevens, referring to the recent closure of several Boston schools.

"We can't get no education so well do what we know best-try and make money off drugs."

Billy Bush, 37, who sat in the cluster of men outside a corner convenience store about a mile down the street from the gang members, said he uses cocaine and heroin.

"There ain't nothing he [President Bush] can do about the ghetto," said Bush, who works as a sometime sandblaster. "He can't win. There's 10 times more crack down here than heroin. They stopped heroin a little bit but they'll never stop crack."

System of the future

New telephone jacks and cable outlets have already been installed in residence halls, but Zannini said the new system will not be activated until a cable transmitting station is ready next fall.

The University is also in the process of securing amplifier equipment, such as satellite dishes, and amplifiers and receivers, he said.

Zannini said the new telephone system will provide students, faculty and staff with digital telephones to replace the old analog telephones.

Randy Sailer, director of Telcommunication Network Services, said the new digital phones will be faster than the analog phones, and will also have better clarity.

The telephones will also have a computer outlet, called a terminal access unit or T.A.U., which a student may use to easily access UMass research or general information, Sailer said.

Because the digital telephones, which transform voice segments into a series of digits, operate much faster than the analog phones, students will be able to use both the telephone and a computer at the same time, he said.

Dukakis proposes new weapons for drugs pact

MEDFORD (AP) — Gov. Dukakis said yesterday the state was mailing flyers to high schools, colleges and drug treatment centers outlining tough new drug laws that took effect yesterday.

Dukakis said details of the laws, among those President Bush proposed Tuesday that other states adopt, also were being provided to police through the state's criminal justice computer network.

"While this is the beginning of a new school year for many of our school children, it will be the end of drug dealers and drug users who think they are above the law," Dukakis said. "We have three new weapons which give us a real triple play against drugs by taking drug dealers and drug users right out of the game, three new weapons that President Bush called for other states to implement in his new drug plan."

One of the laws would subject anyone caught dealing drugs within 1,000 feet of school property to a mandatory two-year jail sentence.

Dukakis, with the help of 400 Medford high school students, extended a police line from the school property to mark off that drug-free zone.

Another law will pull the drivers' licenses of drug users and of teenagers who illegally obtain liquor. It will allow the Registry of Motor Vehicles to suspend a license for up to five years for anyone convicted of a drug offense, even possession.

Those under age 16 can have the issuance of their licenses delayed until 21 under the new law.

Under the third law, anyone caught using fake identification to buy alcohol will lose their real driver's license for six months to a year.

Dukakis said he plans to visit one community a week for the next year to make sure the new laws are being used effectively and to encourage continued drug education and treatment.

"Unlike the president, I agree with Congress that education should receive more of the money and emphasis in our drug-fighting strategy," Dukakis said.

Dukakis said illegal drug use in Massachusetts has declined at twice the national average among high school seniors and cocaine and crack use among high school seniors has declined five times the national average.

Dukakis said his administration made a commitment five years ago to fight drugs in schools with the creation of the Governor's Alliance Against Drugs.

"We need resources, not rhetoric, in the fight against drugs," he said. "We cannot continue to spend twice as much on a Stealth B-2 bomber as we do on drug and alcohol education for every school child in the country."

strength, is the key to successful completion of the challenge.

Students are charged $1 per attempt and each participant receives a free plastic cup and coupons donated by Domino's pizza, Cashman said.

Prizes are also awarded to the most successful participants, he said. They include a $30 ski tune-up at the Ski Haus in Hadley, dinner for two at Pizza Hut, University of Massachusetts t-shirts and travel bags.

Last year, ROTC donated $300 to the Easter Seals chapter in Springfield.

However, more aggressive recruiting tactics, including a public address system, have increased campus interest and placed this year's goal at $500, Cashman said.

"You get to lay out, soak up a few rays, and watch people fall in the water," he said, encouraging students to participate. "People on campus enjoy it and it's good exposure for us."

As of 3 p.m. yesterday, senior Diana Casey held the fastest time of 51 seconds as she successfully reached the opposite bank.

"It was thrilling," Casey said. "It really tests your skills."

Major Jack Moore, a military science instructor, said the ROTC is heavily involved with charities, including Toys for Tots fundraisers during holidays and visiting soldiers' homes in the area.

"It's good community service," he said.

A second and final rope challenge will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 12.

Mass. police arrest 12 suspected from Colombia cocaine ring

BOSTON (AP) — Just hours after President Bush announced a $7.9 billion attack on drugs, Massachusetts state police swept through drug houses in the Boston area, arresting 12 alleged members of a cocaine ring with ties to Medellin, Colombia.

Attorney General James M. Shannon said the raids resulted from a 16-month investigation by his office and 10 federal, state and local law enforcement agencies, including the U.S. Customs Service, Drug Enforcement Administration, and FBI.

Six of the eight raids took place in Boso. The others were in Revere and Malden.

Shannon said nine of the 12 people arrested on cocaine-related charges are Colombian nationals, and several of them ties to Medillin, where five families, or crime cartels, control a major portion of the cocaine shipped to the United States, Shannon said.

About 75 police and law enforcement officers participated in the searches. All the raids were at private residences with one exception, the Deleitese Restaurant in East Boston.

"There were small quantities of cocaine and marijuana seized, along with drug paraphernalia and cash. But what we were mainly after today was bodies and records, and we got both," said Mary Breslauer, a spokeswoman for Shannon.

Shannon said the alleged drug ring had maintained a series of "stash pads" to store narcotics in the Boston area and has orchestrated the distribution of "kilogram quantities" of cocaine over the last six months.

During their arrangements in East Boston District Court, defense attorney Michael Cerulli questioned whether the suspects were rounded up in the fervor connected with Bush's Tuesday night television address about drugs.

Shannon insisted the timing of the raids was not connected with Bush's speech. "These sorts of things aren't cooked up overnight," he said.

Three of those arrested had outstanding warrants against them and will be deported by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, Breslauer said.

The other nine pleaded innocent at their arrangements. Judge Charles Healy ordered three of them held without bail on charges of trafficking in cocaine. They were: Oscar E. Atehortua, 33, Fabian E. Villada Jr., 31, and Jaime Atehortua, 32, all of Boston.

Bail was set for two others at $500,000 surety or $50,000 cash. They were Luis Mosquera Jr., 26, of Boston, who was charged with cocaine trafficking, and Julio Atehortua, 37, also of Boston, who faces a conspiracy charge.

Bail was set at $100,000 surety or $10,000 cash for Ignacio Arredondo, 47, of Malden, and a $10,000 for John T. Sarafin, 26, of Boston. Both were charged with conspiracy.

Stephen S. Adamek, 25, of Boston was released on his own recognizance on a charge of possession of marijuana, and Shawn P. McEacher, 26, also of Boston, was released on $100 bail on charges of possession of marijuana and cocaine.

BOOKS

Authors' inside jokes now successful spoof

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

You can tell Thomas Neenan and Greg Hancock have learned a lot from their travels abroad. No Bud Light for these two. Their lager is Grolsch, imported from Holland.

Downing lagers while relaxing in Neenan's sparsely-decorated New Providence, N.J. apartment, the two discussed the most recent road they traveled — the road to becoming successful first-time authors. Their "Let's Blow Thru Europe" (Mustang Publishing Co., 1989) is a parody of the travel guide series, "Let's Go," published by Harvard Student Agencies.

Neenan and Hancock laugh easily as they discuss their creation. Old graduate school buddies from Pennsylvania State University, they are proud their book is racking up positive reviews even as it causes many a college student's sides to split.

For Neenan, 30, and Hancock, 33, their "Let's Blow Thru Europe" is more than a satire, a travel book or even a second income so they can afford their Grolsch.

It is also sweet revenge for their college days when neither was asked to join a fraternity.

"We're not big on them," said Hancock, who went to Penn State and now lives in Montclair, N.J. Neenan went to Queen's College in Ireland.

The version that wound up on the shelves includes passages that portray fraternities in a less-than-flattering light.

Neenan said the book was written for a far more important reason than picking on college students.

" 'Let's Go' Is pretty good, but too many people use it as gospel," he said, referring to the 20-plus travel book series. " A lot of kids who go to Europe and see museums because of 'Let's Go' would never spend an afternoon at a museum in the U.S."

On their last trip to Europe, the two found themselves following Let's Go-ers and taking notes. Scribbling notes, actually, on napkins and the like. The note-taking, they claim, was originally only to remember wisecracks they told each other about people they saw.

It was only later, when the two watched too many Let's Go-ers enter museums smiling and exit yawning that they realized there may be a market for a book that informed students of the fun and exciting life in Europe. They felt they knew what today's college students hope to gain from a trip to Europe — access to parties so great, clubs so hip and beers so German they'll want to go back again and again — they'll feel that "cultured."

"We haven't given up our day jobs just yet," Neenan, a chemist at "a large New Jersey corporation," said. Hancock is a manager of international business development at the same corporation. Neither sees themselves as an author just yet.

Readers shouldn't take their book too seriously, they agreed. It only became a travel book after their editors suggested they add realism to their spoof.

> " I proudly went into (Amsterdam's) Sex Museum. I felt an obligation to the readers. "
> –Thomas Neenan

The way they explain it, the two were having a ball making fun of "Let's Go," college students, Europeans, life in general — when their editor went and ruined it by making them work.

So they went back to the streets, Hancock said, finding addresses. They had friends look up things in other cities. Neenan, a native of Ireland, called family in Dublin and London to check telephone numbers there.

But even before their editor forced them to check telephone numbers, they said they felt a sense of journalistic duty.

For example Neenan explored, er, museums.

"I proudly went into [Amsterdam's] Sex Museum," he said. "I felt an obligation to the readers."

What he said he found in the museum is best reserved for the reader's imagination, but Neenan said the museum has photographs and artwork of orgies, not orgies themselves.

Their journalistic duty also took them to several beer halls in Germany, where for the sake of the reader they felt a moral obligation to try every beer available.

"We didn't think beer was major topic in the book, but everybody else seems to," Neenan said as Hancock went to get another Grolsch. "Beer is to Munich what sex and drugs are to Amsterdam," Neenan said with a shrug.

The authors also made these observations:

On Amsterdam: "Sex is sold like cars. Drugs are sold there like zucchini in the U.S."

On Rome: "If you arrive by air, you'll land at Leonardo da Vinci Airport. Imagine, da Vinci built an airport hundreds of years ago! Was that guy ahead of his time, or what?"

Neenan and Hancock said they realize most people over age 25 won't appreciate their humor, but that doesn't bother them.

"There's a certain age group that's gong to enjoy this book," Hancock said, adding their readers are probably the same college students the authors spoof.

But while the authors wanted to write a funny travel book, they also set boundaries on whom and what they ridiculed.

Neenan explained: "You feel lucky after traveling in Eastern Europe. [It's not] like Amsterdam — where they just want to party. It's very sobering."

He said another area they did not make light of were the drugs and prostitution in Amsterdam's Red Light District.

"We didn't feel comfortable promoting drugs or prostitution," Neenan said. "We felt readers were old enough to know what they wanted."

The authors said that's part of the philosophy behind the book — no telling people what to do, unlike the book they spoof.

" 'Let's Go' tells people where to go, what to see, but the places aren't fun or interesting," Hancock said. "They're just nearest the train station."

That wasn't what the authors thought college students wanted from Europe. As they write in the book, "Let's not forget — we are here to party."

Mary Higgins Clark: The interview

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

Collegian: What makes a good mystery?

Clark: A good mystery is made by a sense of suspense and impending danger — especially danger to a person that you, as the reader, have formed a relationship with. You like that person, and you don't want anything to happen to him or her.

Collegian: Where do your characters come from?

Mary Higgins Clark

Clark: Everywhere. I go to a lot of trials and sometimes I'll pick up an incident from the trial and use it. I read the newspapers. I always say "suppose" and "what if." I never use a true case, because it would constrict me terribly. But I may take an incident from that case or where the person was found. Something. Maybe because this is my field, the ideas for the mysteries just jump into my head.

Collegian: Some of your earlier books focused on a topic in the news — artificial insemination, capital punishment. Do you think your latest novel misses that element?

Clark: What I try to use is a social situation that exists. In ["While My Pretty One Sleeps"] a 27-year-old girl is living with her father, and they're living as two adults and they like each other. And a lot more people are living at home who are not married.

Some issues — like capital punishment — are more stark, but each book touches on an issue that fits the story.

Collegian: How did your early years as a writer — a widow with young children — affect your career?

Clark: It simply meant that I had to be quite disciplined, because it meant the only time I could write was before I went to work. during the day, there was getting the kids off to school, fixing breakfast, driving in car pools. And when I came home at night I certainly couldn't closet myself, not with five very young children. So the only time I could write was from 5 to 7 o'clock in the morning, which by the way is a lovely time to write.

Collegian: Who are your favorite authors?

Clark: I have so many authors that I enjoy. Growing up, I discovered I enjoyed the mystery-suspense field, from Sherlock Holmes to Agatha Christie. I gulped through them. Now I've just finished "Bonfire of Vanity." It was wonderful, a marvelous book. I think I have a pretty broad spectrum of books that I like.

Collegian: What advice do you give to young writers?

Clark: The advice I give to anyone who is churning inside to become a writer is to find what area you are going to write in. Then you should join an organization for that kind of writer. If you write mystery-suspense, join the Mystery Writers of America. Go to some of the seminars. You get a monthly magazine. Too many people write like shooting into the wind. They don't define their field. They send a 30,000-word story to a magazine that publishes 2,000 words. It immediately shows they don't have the interest to be astute in the field.

Collegian: You seem to have a hardcover best seller every two years. What can readers expect in 1991?

Clark: Oh, that will be "Loves Music, Loves to Dance," and that's going to be about a girl who answers the personal ads and then disappears. But before that, this November there will be a collection called "The Anastasia Syndrome." And that's a collection of the title story, two novellas and two short stories. The other four have been published in magazines over the past two years. "The Anastasia Syndrome," however, is new. That's what I'm proofreading right now.

New and noteworthy

Mini-reviews of recent publications

Fiction:

While My Pretty One Sleeps, by Mary Higgins Clark. Simon and Schuster. 318 pages. $19.95. Available at Walden, Dalton and Barnes & Noble book stores.

Clark's latest effort is a mediocre mystery by a recognized, respected author. For many readers, however, even Clark's mediocrity surpasses other less effective authors' best efforts. For this reason, "While My Pretty One Sleeps" will catch many off-guard and provide enjoyable reading.

Jacob the Baker: Gentle Wisdom or a Complicated World, by Noah benShea. Villard books. 113 pages. $12.95. Possibly available at several Amherst book stores, such as Goliard and Albion.

According to the book jacket, the author took 18 years to finish his work. I don't know if anything is worth 18 years' wait, but "Jacob the Baker" is a fine work, not necessarily as a story, but instead as a set of thoughts the reader can consider in a "complicated world."

Non-fiction:

Pearls of Childhood, by Vera Gissing. St. Martin's Press. 176 Pages. $16.95. Possibly available at several Amherst book stores, such as Goliard and Albion.

"Pearls of Childhood" is a soft-spoken book that presents a different side to World War II: those who escaped the Nazis' wrath but whose families were exterminated. It is a sad book, written with the innocence of a young girl who grows up fast in an adopted land.

Champion of the Great American Family, by Pat Schroeder. Random House. 194 pages. $17.95. Available at Walden and Dalton book stores, as well as several Amherst book stores.

Schroeder feels the United States must redirect its priorities if it expects to compete in the 21st century.

Drawing upon her experiences as a mother and a congresswoman, as well as the experiences of other mothers who have written to her, Schroeder presents several real-life dramas to emphasize her position on family policies. The combination is effective, as is the book as a whole.

"Champion of the Great American Family" is a solid, fact-filled essay on where the United States has failed in the past, what American families appear to want and where the United States should go in the future to best play catch-up to the successes of other industrialized nations.

The Debt and the Deficit: False Alarms/Real Possibilities, by Robert Heilbroner and Peter Bernstein. W.W. Norton. 144 pages. $12.95. Available at several Amherst book stores.

Heilbroner and Bernstein, both noted economists, take a conservative approach to the difficulties the American economy faces because of the federal debt and deficit. What they really do is play with numbers.

Less conservative economists won't be impressed with the authors' findings, but the essay is still interesting reading, if to do nothing else but comfort one into believing the economy is completely sound.

South Africa holds general election on apartheid

Blacks stage general strike; election results due today

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government held a general election yesterday that measured white attitudes toward apartheid and a proposal by the governing party to share limited power with blacks.

Hundreds of thousands of disenfranchised blacks staged a general strike that capped a nationwide protest of the parliamentary election.

Government officials said the vote was the most crucial since the governing National Party came to power on promises of strict race segregation in 1948.

More than 90 percent of black workers stayed home in major cities, according to employer organizations and transportation companies.

Most black schools and many attended by Indian and mixed-race students were closed, along with most businesses in the black townships.

Police used tear gas and whips to disperse mixed-race protesters who marched in the mixed-race township of Reiger Park near Boksburg, east of Johannesburg. Many demonstrators were children. Police arrested two men.

Before they attacked, police escorted television crews away from the demonstration, banned along with any other election defiance gatherings.

Police arrested 13 anti-election protesters at a voting station in the port city of Durban, and dispersed 30 mixed-race protesters at a polling booth near Cape Town, arresting a television crew filming the scene.

Train service into Cape Town was delayed by damage from an early morning explosion on the track, the South African Transport Service said. No injuries were reported.

Acting President F.W. de Klerk smiled, shook hands and enjoyed a champagne breakfast at his Pretoria-area polling booth. His long-governing National Party was expected to lose up to 30 of its 13 parliamentary seats, mostly to the Conservative Party which favors strict race discrimination.

Nevertheless, the Nationalists were expected to retain a majority in Parliament's dominant white chamber after promoting a plan to begin sharing some power with the country's 8 million blacks.

The government said 3,170,667 whites were eligible to vote. Turnout was reported sluggish because of freezing temperatures and biting winds early yesterday, but lines formed at polling places after noon, government radio said.

Whites voted for members of the white House of Assembly. More than 665,000 Indians and 1.7 million people of mixed race were eligible to vote for separate Parliament chambers with little power. Blacks have no vote.

The polls opened at 7 a.m. and were to close at 9 p.m. Final election results were not expected until today.

Police armed with handguns were stationed at most polling booths. Major black townships around Durban, Cape Town, Pretoria, Johannesburg and eastern Cape cities were quiet.

Virtually no taxi-vans were operating, and buses and trains to the cities were 70 percent to 100 percent empty.

"The stay-away is quite obviously very, very substantial," said Vincent Brett, a spokesman for the Associated Chambers of Commerce.

"Biting temperatures probably had an influence on workers' decisions to stay home," said the independent South African Press Association.

Hundreds of thousands of blacks honored the general strike, which began Tuesday to cap a monthlong defiance campaign that has included mass disobedience of apartheid laws.

The mostly black Congress of South African Trade Unions said more than 1 million blacks participated in Tuesday's demonstrations, rallies and strikes. Police arrested 500 people and witnesses said officers used tear gas, whips, rubber bullets and birdshot to break up demonstrations.

News briefs from around the world . . .

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A Soviet trawler collided with a Finnish tanker and sank in the Baltic Sea yesterday, and the coast guard said the only Soviet sailor who was able to abandon ship died after being pulled from the water.

The other 14 Soviet crewmen were missing and presumed dead.

"Only one man, probably the radio operator, had managed to get into the water, but he died upon arrival at the hospital," said Waldemar Berlin, head of coast guard rescue operations.

"I've worked here for 30 years and I can't recall a more serious accident" in the Baltic, he said.

The tanker Tebo Star collided with the trawler Labushkino at 12:11 a.m. 32 miles southwest off the Swedish island of Gotland.

The Soviet trawler sank within minutes, Berlin said, and some wreckage and an oil slice were all that marked the site.

The cause of the accident was not known. The weather was fair and winds were moderate at 27 mph.

The 6,000-ton Tebo Star sent out a distress signal immediately after colliding with the 75-foot-long Labushkino. A nearby Soviet trawler, the Matrosova, picked up the fatally injured sailor more than an hour after the accident.

According to rescue workers, the Finnish tanker veered to avoid a collision with another Soviet trawler when it hit the Labushkino.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Rescue teams yesterday began evacuating survivors from a domestic jetliner that crashed three days ago in thick Amazon jungle, killing nine of the 54 people aboard, an air force spokesman said.

A woman airlifted from the wreckage of the Varig airlines jet died en route to Brasilia, said spokesman Col. Jose Maria dos Santos said in Brasilia.

Santos said an air force helicopter was ferrying 41 survivors from the crash site to a ranch near Sao Jose do Xingu, in north- central Mato Grosso state 1,050 miles northwest of Rio de Janeiro.

"We've got 11 in the air and 30 more at the site, but we'll get them all out today," Santos said by telephone.

On Tuesday, four survivors walked hours through the jungle to the ranch and radioed for help. Searchers had been unable to locate the plane or to confirm the crash since the Boeing 737 went down Sunday.

The jungle prevented the helicopter from landing at the crash site, Santos said. He said it had to hover over the wreckage while victims were raised by winch.

The cause of the crash was not known.

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Many sources report an explosion Aug. 17 at an Iraqi missile plant south of Baghdad and some put the death toll at more than 700, but Iraq's obsessively secret government has said nothing.

Western diplomats reached by telephone Wednesday in Baghdad, capital of Iraq, confirmed an explosion occurred at the huge missile complex but said they had no details.

No information was available on what caused the explosion, but there was no immediate indication of sabotage.

In London, the daily independent quoted diplomats and Middle East sources Wednesday as saying 700 people were killed, including Egyptian engineers helping the Iraqis develop a new missile.

The UMass Arts Council

Founded in 1966, the Arts Council fosters excellence and scope in the arts on campus. The Arts Council's activities include:

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR THE ARTS
Through two programs, the Arts Council awards grants totalling over $200,000 annually to support RSOs, campus galleries, the Residential Arts Program, and other UMass groups that present arts events and programs.

ARTS INFORMATION
Every two weeks, the Arts Council publishes the Arts Calendar, a listing of arts activities on the Five College campuses. The calendar is available at galleries, box offices, and information centers at all five colleges.

ARTS MANAGEMENT TRAINING
The Arts Council supports arts management courses and internships for UMass students through a program offered by the Arts Extension Service, 545-2360. A two-day, two-hour workshop series, conducted by the Program Director of the Arts Council, on arts programming and grantwriting, will be held on Sept. 13 and 18 and October 4 and 11 from 3-5pm. Free; registration required. For further info contact the Arts Council.

PUBLIC ART
The Arts Council is actively involved in expanding the public art collection at UMass. The Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library, an exhibition space for UMass faculty and students, will host a closing reception for the summer exhibition of works by Karen Dolmanisth on Wednesday, September 20 from 4-6pm and an opening reception for the fall exhibition on Wednesday, September 27 from 4-6pm. Rain dates Thursdays, September 21 and 28. The Council commissioned a graduate student, now alumnus, and a distinguished Massachusetts-based artist to redesign the Student Union Plaza and has recently, with the assistance of two grants from the National Endowment for the Arts commissioned a renowned landscape architect and artist to redesign Metawampe Lawn. A memorial to UMass' first sitting president, William Smith Clark, was designed by a student and is in the final design stages. This past year students in the Art and Landscape Architecture departments participated in a competition to design a commemorative garden to Helen Curtis Cole, the University's first and only Dean of Women, who served from the mid-1940s to the early-1970s. The garden is proposed for a site between Old Chapel and Goodell Building.

The Civility Mural, designed and created by graduate art student Jonathan Kohrman, was initiated last year by environmental design student Jon Satz. The Council managed the project in cooperation with the Graduate Art Students Association and UARTS; the project was funded by Provost Richard D. O'Brien, the Arts Council, the Art Department, and GASA. Technical assistance was provided by the Physical Plant Department. A reception to celebrate its completion will take place on Thursday, Sept. 7 from 3-5pm at the Flagstone Terrace, Campus Center. Refreshments and music! Rain date: Sept. 8.

Early fall events/activities:

Sept. 7	Reception to celebrate completion of Civility Mural
Sept. 13	Arts Programming and Grantwriting Workshop
Sept. 18	Arts Programming and Grantwriting Workshop
Sept. 20	Reception, Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library
Sept. 27	Reception, Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library
Sept. 27	First deadline for grant applications
Oct. 4	Arts Programming and Grantwriting Workshop
Oct. 11	Arts Programming and Grantwriting Workshop

Events rain dates, following day

The Arts Council is funded primarily by a portion of the Arts Fee. The Council includes undergraduate and graduate students, alumni, faculty, and professional staff representatives who are appointed each April for the following academic year by representative senates.

For more information, contact the UMass Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, 545-0202.

Acquire new skills at UMass . . .

Freshmen, if you came to the University to learn the Three Rs — Readin', Ritin, and Rithmetic — you may as well turn around and go home. All that can be offered at UMass for this and the next few academic years is a thorough learning experience in the three Ps: Patience, Perseverance, and Pliability.

Tom Ciampi

As you have probably learned already, your University is so strapped for cash that many academic departments have been forced to cut back personnel, greatly reduce the number of course sections available, and turn away students wishing to enroll, creating a ghost town ambience in many once-flourishing halls. Watch out for the tumbleweed.

But don't despair: You can still attain at least some skills that a future employer will find respectable. Tell him or her that in your four years at UMass, you had the patience to cope with registration lines that made Hands Across America look like a rope chain; the perseverance to attend a class for two weeks straight even though you were 18th on the waiting list. And that you had the pliability and flexibility to add yourself into courses like Beverage Management, Current Issues in Nursing, and Introduction to Outdoor Recreation because the class that you really wanted — Contemporary Analytical Philosophy — was oversubscribed three semesters in a row.

Look on the bright side: Learning the three Ps can boost you above the rest of the pack.

Patience: Your rivals from other universities will never learn how to remain as relaxed as well as we have when our Teaching Assistants reply to our questions with "I'm not sure, but I'll get back to you on that."

Perseverance: They will never come to know how to endure rigorous but necessary tactical maneuvering like sleeping on a professor's doorstep each and every day to beg and plead with him to break the rules of the department and let you into his class.

Pliability: They'll never learn how to feel as at ease as we did when we sat in a classroom next to a 50 gallon garbage can employed to catch drops from a leaky roof.

If your prospective employer has by now begun to dismiss you as a liar, start giving some specifics of what you actually had to bear while you attended UMass: Tell him/her that the Associate Vice-Chancellor for University relations said that, in response to state budget cuts for fiscal year 1990, the University was forced to lay off 40 to 50 part-time faculty members and more than 300 teaching assistants, leave 24 full-time faculty positions unfilled, and reduce other staff positions by more than 200.

Continue to tell him/her that state budget cuts forced the University to decrease enrollment by 900 students and cut the number of class sections by over 950. Tell him/her that the University was unable to purchase some 13,000 new books.

Then tell your employer that it cost you an extra $400 in tuition in your first year alone to prevent further actions by the University.

Close by saying that with Patience, Perserverance, and Pliability, you pulled through. I think s/he will be so impressed by, or at least sympathetic, to your University experience in the Three Ps, you'll be hired on the spot.

Maybe then, your employer will be generous enough to send you to school at night to gain the proper skills that you need to perform adequately on the job.

But whatever you do, embrace a fourth P, Prudence, and enroll far away from this or any other Massachusetts university.

The victim of stupidity

US Rep. Barney Frank is a victim.

He's a victim of his own ignorance.

He's a victim of his own arrogance.

He's a victim of his own stupidity.

And yes, he's a victim of freelance prostitute/drug pusher/housesitter Stephen L. Gobie.

Cosmo Macero Jr.

So should we feel sorry for the tanned Dem. from Newton?

Certainly not.

Frank's failure to recognize the illegalities that were going on under his own roof provides us with a neat character sketch of this man who's been riding the government thoroughbred for eight years.

The issue here is not Frank's admitted and outward homosexuality.

Gerry Studds, who's no stranger to the sex scandal muck, functions successfully as a congressman — much to the delight of his Cape Cod constituents. Even Frank's relationship with Gobie (a convicted felon), both the sexual and "professional" aspects, needn't be questioned.

But a prostitution ring, possibly involving minors, being run out of his cushy Washington apartment? Barney . . . give us a break.

There was a time when elected officials were looked upon to set an example for the citizens in their district, as well as to represent them. The irresponsible manner in which the fourth district representative conducted his personal affairs is hardly becoming of a so-called public servant.

Frank's method of choosing a personal assistant was his first mistake. The Washington Blade is not easily mistaken for The National Business Employment Weekly, and a "hot bottom" and "large endowment" (how Gobie described himself in a Blade classified ad which Frank answered) are hardly valuable assets for performing "administrative duties."

Aware of Gobie's colorful past, Frank saw fit to "help" the poor fellow change the road he was on. Part of the agreement included a salary in excess of $20,000 a year for Gobie (out of Frank's own silver-lined pocket), and use of the congressman's Washington apartment.

Somewhere along the line, Gobie saw fit to set up a brothel to relieve all the sexual tension on Capitol Hill. He of the large endowment claims Frank knew all along about the recreational activities going on in his home.

Naturally, Barney denies all knowledge, and to be honest, Gobie obviously isn't the most reliable of sources. Still again, this isn't the issue.

There are situations that people should never allow themselves to be put in. "It's not like I didn't know what was going on upstairs," Frank said. "I didn't know what was going on 400 miles away." A congressman should know what's going on in his own home, even if it's 4,000 miles away.

"I don't think the voters will penalize me for getting suckered by a guy I was trying to help," Frank said. Maybe not . . . but don't expect a heck of a lot of respect. Open your eyes Barney, 'cause if you snooze . . . you lose.

Money may cloud visions

I finally learned that money and big business really do make the world go 'round. This summer, I had the pleasure of working for New England Telephone, a subsidiary of the NYNEX Corporation. It was a hard and dirty job, but I loved it.

Then along came the strike.

No one I worked with expected it. All of the other "Baby Bell" corporations seemed prepared to settle. AT&T settled with no time to spare. Everybody seemed happy with their contracts.

Gayle Long

The summer flew by as the contract deadline crept closer. The union leaders were quiet. The information tapes set up by both sides were useless. I called the union hall tape which declared "We will not settle." When I called the company tape, it insisted that the talks were still in progress and that they were reaching an agreement.

Nothing was settled and the devoted union members, myself included, headed for the dreaded picket lines.

At first, it was something of a small vacation. We learned that there were no negotiation talks scheduled. For me, it was simply the last three weeks of summer with no pay, but for most of the strikers, it meant no mortgage payments, no income, and no way to support their families.

I could not believe it. What were these people going to do? Most of them said they would just have to wait it out. Others went out in search of other work.

As I walked the picket lines, I really thought that other people would have respect for these strikers, but what I saw came as a shock.

The company hired contractors to help pick up the slack. Total scabs. These people were mostly from out-of-state, working without union representation. The striking employees followed the scabs all over the area and picketed their work areas. If nothing else, the picketers wanted the scabs to know that by crossing the picket line and working, the scabs were doing work that they had no right to do.

It started to get vicious. The picketers walked slowly in front of the scabs' trucks and yelled out names that would be better left out of print.

The police arrived at the scene, who, by the way, were union members. The police force is our friend right? Wrong!

The police who knew that the contractors were not natives to the area, simply told the strikers they would have to move their picket and stop their "harassment."

This was amazing. The phone workers are tax-paying citizens with a legitimate gripe who have the right to strike. But remember, the phone company was paying for these cops to be on hand during the strike — to be prepared to drag away these "fugitives of justice."

I have never considered myself, or my father (also a phone company employee) a hardened criminal. These workers were just regular people trying their hardest to maintain the standard of living they had been accustomed to.

The police were being bought. Not in the sense that mobsters were getting away with murder, but that the working man was being deprived his right to work and earn.

The police work and earn as well. But something called money has clouded the vision of public service. I guess it was stupid of me to think that public servants took pride in their community . . . they take pride in their paychecks.

Book a great read

I would like to bring to the attention of the campus community a book recently published by the University of Massachusetts Press. The Far East Comes Near, edited by Lucy Nguyen-Hong-Nhiem and Joel M. Halpern, is a compilation of the painful and courageous stories of current UMass students and recent graduates who are refugees from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. Sadly, some of these young people and their families have been victims of racism in this country.

As the new school year begins, it is important to remember that we have the opportunity on this campus to benefit and learn from the diversity of our community as well as the responsibility to help ensure that human differences are appreciated and treated with respect.

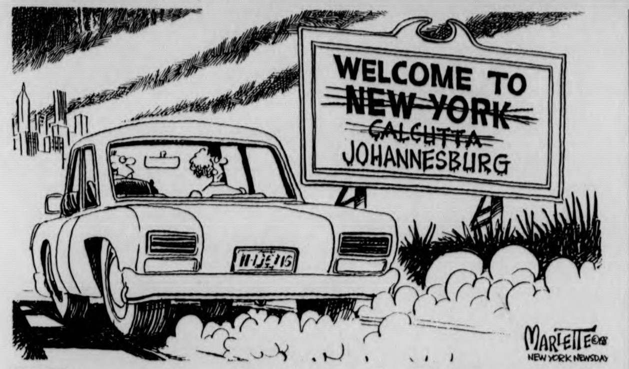
Learning more about the personal experiences of people different from ourselves is an important step to overcoming prejudice.

I hope that this book will be widely read and discussed in classes this fall.

Susan Kahn
Office of Human Relations

Are there any issues you feel strongly enough to put on paper?

If so, we want to hear about them. Your opinion can make a difference.



Where is the real Batman?

When I discovered that my friend's father (a respected surgeon in his community) owned a Batman auto sun shield, I realized things had gone too far.

"Batmania" has poisoned America, overdosing the masses with the most blatant commercialism since the "Don't worry, Be Happy," fiasco of early 1988.

Darren Garnick

The Batman logo is branded on t-shirts, coffee mugs, bumper stickers, gumball machines, water jugs, trading cards, posters, boxer shorts, shoelaces and stationery.

Warner Brothers, the studio which released Batman, has a catalog catering to the Bat-elitist. In the family heirloom department, $135.99 buys a set of three commemorative limited-edition medallions (Batman, Joker, and the Batmobile), cast in one troy ounce of pure silver. Batman 50th Anniversary lithographs, autographed by the Caped Crusader's creator, Bob Kane, can be yours for $595.00 — plus $14.50 for postage and handling.

With all that cash up for grabs, get-rich-quick artists are scrambling to hop on the Batwagon. Warner Brothers has hired Attorney J. Joseph Bainton to prosecute counterfeiters of Batmerchandise. The unlicensed items are "all schlock," Bainton told the Boston Herald, "It may look the same. But after three washings, that t-shirt will fall apart. The quality is radically different. After a month, that bogus Batman hat will be worthless."

It is all worthless, Joe. The shirts, the hats, the movie.

It is hardly "THE MOVIE OF THE DECADE", nor is it "MAKING HISTORY THE WORLD OVER" as the Warner Brothers' public relations clowns are bold enough to declare. Batman the movie has no charm. The title character is a sadistic, gloomy vigilante with no sense of ethics.

To me, the movie and its merchandising are not simply a passing fad. My hero has been desecrated. I grew up watching Adam West as Batman. Regardless of what the comic book goons say, Batman, the 1960s TV sitcom, is the irreplaceable standard.

As a youngster, I did not understand the show's satire, but the fights and the traps were fascinating. Batman, Robin and Batgirl's choreographed brawls could generate more excitement than Muhammed Ali, Marvin Hagler, or Sugar Ray Leonard were ever capable of doing.

Fights took place in abandoned factories, furnished with plenty of ropes to swing on, barrels to throw, and industrial equipment to kill the Dynamic Duo.

Each day, at 7 a.m. (well worth waking up for before the Age of the VCR), I'd wonder how Batman and Robin would escape from the arch-villain's dastardly traps. Mr. Freeze tried to make them into giant "Frosty Freezes." If I recall correctly, Batman was to become a pineapple snowcone, and Robin a lime one.

If you haven't yet experienced the TV series' flavor, read a portion of the first episode's plot summary (from The Official Batman Batbook, by Joel Eisner): "Two cleverly hidden riddles in the legal documents lead Batman and Robin to the new discotheque, What a Way to Go-Go! There the Riddler's plan is once again put into action. Being a minor, Robin is legally unable to enter the disco, so he waits outside in the Batmobile while Batman enters alone. While Batman dances the Batusi with the Riddler's assistant Molly, Robin falls victim to the Riddler's tranquilizer dartgun and is carried away . . . by the Riddler and his Molehill Mob. Batman, having drunk a glass of drugged orange juice, is in no condition to pursue them."

Anyone interested in preserving the true meaning of Batman — Batman as entertainment — can catch back to back episodes on the Family Channel from 11 p.m. to midnight. If you don't have cable TV, drop by my apartment for a free viewing. It is the least I can do to restore sanctity to the Batman name.

"ME AND THE BOYS HEREBY WANTS TO EXERCISE OUR VETO AUTHORITY . . . !"

Attention students . . .

Over $8 billion of our tax dollars may be appropriated to fight the Drug War if President Bush gets his way.

How would you define a "Drug War?" Who are the victims? Who are the "criminals?" Do you believe in the legalization of marijuana, cocaine or other drugs? What determines if a drug should be available to the general public?

President Bush wants to expand the fight to other drug infested nations like Columbia using Americans' Military forces. Is he asking too much? Not enough?

Do you have any answers? Submit your column or letter regarding this drug "problem" by next Thursday, September 15 to appear in Friday's "Point/Counterpoint" section. This section will be devoted to varieties of opinions on today's hot issues and will appear twice a month on the Editorial/Opinion page.

Life in the 'fast' lane

Well folks, it's time to get back to life in the fast lane at our esteemed University. Things are supposed to be getting easier for the undergrads, less people (according to the folks on top of Mount Whitmore) equaling less hassle all around. You bet there will be less people around, less staff, less faculty, but comparing it to the student population, a veretable drop in the proverbial basket.

Nancy Cohen

The dorm life according to Garp, has changed a great deal since I was young. No more co-ed bathrooms, ARD's and RD's have become the new cops of the nineties, as per the new alcohol policy.

It's high-tech with art deco rules and Orwellian ethics. It appears that the police want them to take responsiblities for their students. If an ARD or RD sees an undergrad at a party, he must either leave or card him/her. I guess the forewarning of the men in the blue or brown uniforms is being phased out Hands down to the computer system somewhere on campus that collapsed, putting a stop to Financial Aid accross our great campus. A little confusion never hurt anyone, especially someone who goes to UMass.

Cheers to the people who actually got up at five o'clock in the morning to get in line to wait to be put on a waiting list at eight o'clock in the morning just to get into a Gen Ed. You are truly dedicated students. I did that once, and found it, yes to be a spritual experience, but no not a very practical or inspirational one. There's something to be said for a nice brisk stand at five forty-five in the morning, almost makes you feel good to be alive. If you're a first year student, I am truly sorry for you.

I definately would like to salute a publication that has been put down for generations. The CATE guide (Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide), might not have the most extensive criticism, but it does have lovely black and white photogs of happy students. Let's face it folks, if we don't give them accurate criticisms, who are we to criticize.

And by the way, when is that ground breaking for the new sports arena that's going to place us in the same esteemed company as Harvard and UPenn? Because I definitely want to be there to soak in all the greatness that these carptetbaggers, oh I mean generous sponsors. I'm sure the arena will give us all the funding we need to keep up those lovely trailers.

Do I appear to be grumpy, or perhaps by chance slightly disillusioned? If you guessed yes, you belong in college.

It's not that I don't like the University, I've had a lot of fun here, it's just that people usually outgrow it a year or two before they graduate (even if it is on time). The strange mixture between the reality of bureaucracy (which they are trying to convince you is illusary and the illusion of universal acceptance which they are trying to convince you) is too close to reality for anyone outside of UMass to digest — let alone believe in.

Oh well, enough of social consciousness for one day. Maybe these aren't things that anybody else thinks of, at least not all at once on a given day. There's always the french fries at the Hatch to think of.

An incurable 411 addict

It's true that you never appreciate the little things in life until you don't have them anymore.

Imagine trying to survive life today without electricity. That would mean no hair dryers, no microwave ovens, no MTV. Just imagine.

Jim Clark

Well, the time has come where I have to cope. The workers of NYNEX have gone on strike, and one of my life's necessities has been shot down.

I am addicted to 411.

Mind you, it's a little more serious when you're in this line of business. Much of your time gathering stories is spent trying to contact people, valuable sources who don't always live in the immediate area. There is only one answer — pick up that phone and dial 411. Or its twin sister, the glorious 555-1212. A simple recipe, just add an area code and you've found the magic password.

But now it's gone, or at least put on hold, so to speak.

I thought it was bad when half of Massachusetts switched to area code 508. That took a little time to adjust, but at least I got through eventually. Now, it's pretty much hopeless.

Of course, they'd always try to make you feel guilty for using Directory Assistance in the first place. They'd threaten to jack up your bill or call you lazy for not being able to get up from your chair and look up the number yourself.

What they don't realize is that the layman in the common household doesn't have a Flagstaff, Arizona directory handy, or any other phone book from any other part of the Northern hemisphere for that matter. And even when the number is at your disposal and you can "let your fingers do the walking", the print is barely legible. Today the average phone book is set up so that even I, with my 20/13 vision can't read it without soliciting the use of a high-powered telescope.

So what to do? I just pick up the phone and dial. Sometimes I'll even call when I'm bored, just to have someone to talk to.

"What city, please?"

"Ummmmmm, how 'bout Shutesbury. The Shutesbury Police Dept."

"One moment please." What follows is a series of keyboard clicks, a brief delay, and then, "I'm sorry — there's no number listed for that."

"What do you mean, the police number is unlisted, or Shutesbury doesn't have a police department?"

Of course, it's all a moot point. Whether or not I've heard that computer voice spitting out numbers, I've satisfied my curiosity and my boredom. Plus it's much more fun than calling those 900 number talk lines, which are addictive in their own way but will eventually cause you to go bankrupt and to have all of your worldly goods repossessed.

But getting that ever-elusive number is not that easy anymore. Now what you get is a recording stating that the phone operators are all tied up, and that they will be with you as soon as possible. And if you're lucky, you'll finally get through to a distraught lonely operator after about 1706 rings, kind of like trying to call student information on moving-in day.

All I can say is I hope the NYNEX workers resolve their strike and get back to work. I sympathize with their plight, as I would with any other union group on strike, and I'm just glad that phone service hasn't been shut down completely. I think if I try really hard, I can live without directory assistance for however long it takes.

But in the meantime, I've got an important call to make. Anyone have a Manhattan phone book by any chance?

When the verdict in the Leona Helmsley case was delivered — guilty of evading $1.2 million in federal income taxes, not guilty of extortion — the New York Post read. GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY, the tabloid screeched in its Thursday edition, GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY, red letters against white, GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY GUILTY and so on, a total of 43 times. That was 10 more than the jury had delivered, but who was counting? If you put your ear to the ground in New York City last Thursday you could practically hear distant voices singing, "Ding dong, the witch is dead."

Sentencing was set for Nov. 14. If jail terms are imposed successively she could get up to five years in jail. She could also be fined $7.75 million. The conviction was "a message that big people and little people alike have a duty to pay taxes," Assistant Attorney General R. Scott Greathead said — a reference to Mrs. Helmsley's remark that "only the little people pay taxes."

STABBING VICTIMS — Joan Heaton (39) and her two daughters, Jennifer (10) and Melissa (8). The Warwick, R.I. residents were found dead in their house Monday night. Police said they were killed over the weekend by an intruder who broke in through a rear window screen and repeatedly stabbed them.

Judge: Bakker competent for PTL fraud trial

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A federal judge ruled Jim Bakker competent to stand trial on fraud charges Wednesday after a government psychiatrist testified the PTL founder was not going crazy when he broke down last week.

Bakker's trial was recessed and he was sent to a federal prison in Butner for psychiatric evaluation last week after he was found in his lawyer's office hallucinating and hiding under a couch.

"For he first time in three years, the whole situation came home to him and he began to cry," Sally Johnson, chief of psychiatric services at the prison, told U.S. District Court Judge Robert Potter yesterday.

"He is not going crazy,' Ms. Johnson testified out of the presence of jurors. "He has no hidden mental illness. he stress that he's feeling is normal. I can't rule it out that it won't happen again, but I can't rule it in either."

Potter asked Bakker, who was brought to court in leg irons and handcuffs, to stand and answer questions.

"Do you understand what you are on trial here for?" the judge asked Bakker, who is accused of fleecing followers of his PTL ministry.

"Yes sir," Bakker responded quietly.

Asked if he was able to assist his lawyers, Bakker said, "I'm very tired, but I believe I can."

Potter ordered Bakker released from federal marshals' custody.

Bakker, 49, showed little emotion, sometimes hanging his head and staring at the floor. He wore a suit his wife, Tammy Faye, had brought him.

Mrs. Bakker, who attended the hearing with other family members, has protested her husband's treatment at the federal prison hospital.

"This should not be allowed in the United States of America," was her only comment as she left the courthouse.

ARTS & LIVING

Stagnating generation leads to regurgitation

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

We are an uncreative generation. We are a generation content to rehash fads and fashions of the past instead of creating our own.

I blame The Big Chill for this. It's one of my favorite movies but, unfortunately, The Big Chill Soundtrack came with it. The youth of our time, who realized that our own generation's music was beginning to flounder, thoroughly embraced the music of the 60's. More 60's compilation albums, including the infamous Freedom Rock, followed. Then "classic rock" stations started infesting the radio dial. Old, washed-up 60's bands checked out of their nursing homes and started recording and touring again. We started buying their albums and seeing their concerts.

Then we started to dress like them. Paisleys, tie-dyes, and peace symbols became the fashion trends. We tried to start our own fashion by marketing florescent colored clothes, but they blinded too many people.

Of course, we did add our own 80's "Let's make a buck if at all possible" philosophy too all this. Whereas in the 60's, people wore tie-dyes and old ripped jeans because it was a creative and inexpensive way to cover their bodies, today we do it because it's fashionable. We happily dish out $20 for a $5 tie-dye, and actually pay more for jeans with holes in them than for jeans without holes. People put peace symbols on everything they own, but don't really mean it. It's just hip to wear peace symbols because people wore them twenty years ago.

Now, on the twentieth anniversary of Woodstock, we realized that money can be made on that, too. Granted, Woodstock didn't save the world, and may have been nothing more than a bunch of spaced out kids listening to great music in the rain, but at least it was free (although it didn't start out that way). Now you can buy twentieth anniversary of Woodstock anything for a nice hefty price. But we're buying the stuff up because it's the trendy thing to do.

But even this marketing of the 60's doesn't bother me as much as the fact that we're on the verge of the 1990's. If the trend keeps up, that means we're going to be reliving the 70's. There are already signs of it. 70's bands, like the Doobie Brothers and the Allman Brothers, are back. The Bee Gees and Donna Summer are being taken seriously again. Compilation albums, such as Songs From the 70's are starting to accompany Songs From the 60's in the record bins. Platform shoes and bell bottoms are trying to make a comeback. Satin shirts (halfway unbuttoned to expose the gold medallions) with wide collars could be next. I'm not ashamed to say that this truly scares me.

Of course, our generation has spawned some creativity. Rap music, especially from bands like Public Enemy, has emerged as the punk music of the late 80's. It's music from the streets and it tells it like it is. It's real. But we have even tried to quell this movement by labelling it "Black Music". Only because of the fight and determination of the rappers has this music made a dent in the mainstream.

I just hope that our kids are more creative than we are. If they are not, then in the year 2000, they will be reliving the 80's, which means they will be reliving the 60's.

Winter Hours are dark and cold

By WILLIAM JAMES GEORGIADES

Winter Hours
Winter Hours
Chrysalis

Six years old and with five records to their credit on the independent Link Label, Winter Hours have produced what they feel to be their first real album, daringly titled Winter Hours. Spin magazine suggests the band is a cross between Julian Cope and The Moody Blues; the description gets the general atmosphere across except for the simple fact that this band just isn't in the same league.

RECORD REVIEW

A couple of moons ago, I half lost an overly involved argument about the validity of slamming any form of artistic enterprise. While the point was accepted that repeat offenders (such as most everything in the top ten or over the age of 40) are more than deserving of a little fair criticism, those just beginning to flounder in the fickle world of creative expression should be spared the wrath of limited minds.

So, in deference to my conscience I can't just say this album is utterly blase. No, I have to tell you about its good points, like how this album grows on you. And I can't say like a virus.

The good stuff; this album was produced by one Lenny Kaye, the best part of the Patty Smith group with his soaring guitar screwing almighty hell out of the smoky screech of vocals by the angry young woman of our time. Check out the Radio Ethiopia album if you're looking for music.

But back to Winter Hours. They're from New Jersey. On the cover of the album the boys are standing in a field, longhaired and goofy/funky a la Led Zeppelin. One member of the band plays no instrument at all. He merely sings, an activity that very few people can pull off. This singer, a Mr. Marques, also seems to have had his voice mixed at a higher decibel than all the real musicians, though whether or not this is to hide their humdrum melodies is hard to tell.

There are eight musicians on work on this album , but only four them get a bold credit, including Joseph Marques, who is responsible for writing a number of the songs. His style consists of a lot of moaning and droning along. In the last track of side one, on a tune titled "Just Like Love", one simply can not believe that such a dire whine of a song could be so professionally produced, the melody and vocals twirling along into a vacuum of frustrating dullness, made all the more so by the craftsmanship of the production.

The gaggle of mediocrity ends with a song called "Rise", the most blatant Doors rip off of all time, causing one to wish the lizard king would rise again and swallow these callow twentysomething boys whole.

"Winter Hours is one of those rare bands that not only has something to say but has a wonderful way of saying it," is a quote from the group's press release. So far a coveted theory, that the more adulatory the press release, the worse the actual product has not been proven wrong. There is nothing rare about this band, precious maybe, but nothing rare, and certainly nothing wonderful.

Certain songs, like "Broken Little Man" and "Roadside Flowers", do have a county feel that betray a certain sincerity, but this underlying feeling does not build into anything.

Like the R.E.M of today, the repetition of the melodies (is it all one song ?) coupled with the groaning vocals can not be hidden, no matter how good the production.

One notable exception to the rule is a song called "Smoke Rings", though by the time you've reached this part of the album you're probably too sick of the band to care.

Stones roll in Philly

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

There are two things that can survive a nuclear war, cockroaches and Keith Richards. Richards proved that Friday night during the Rolling Stones Steel Wheels 25th Anniversary tour at Veterans Stadium in Philadephia.

After all the man has been through, and his arm has the tracks to prove it, Richards and the other members of the Stones managed to play for two and a half hours straight. Mick Jagger stopped only once to let Richards do two songs from his solo album, Talk is Cheap.

Jagger and Richards moved around the gigantic stage constantly, with almost as much energy as they had in their younger days. The band is reportedly drug-free, which may be the reason they were a bit more reserved.

Bill Wyman was more reserved than Jagger and Richards, he didn't wander very far from his position in right field.

Jagger twisted and turned his emaciated torso back and forth across the stage which spanned the whole outfield and part of the left and right field stands. The band needed an elevator to get to the top of the 16-story stage.

Although the tour was dubbed the Steel Wheels tour, luckily, the Stones only played a handful of cuts from their most recent release of the same title. I say luckily because the new album stinks.

They started the show fittingly with "Start Me Up" and led into "Bitch". The band played popular old favorites like "(I Can't Get No) Satisfaction", "You Can't Always Get What You Want", "Gimme Shelter" and "Sympathy for the Devil".

Two huge, 100 foot blow-up dolls of women in low-cut shirts and mini skirts appeared at both sides of the stage as the band ripped into "Honky Tonk Woman". The inflation went smoothly, until a doll lost one of her red high heeled shoes, and the other shoe hung from her foot.

The Stones amazed the audience with "2,000 Light Years From Home", "Dead Flowers" and "Little Red Rooster". The psychedelic cuts pleased the older fans, while the more recent songs, "Undercover of the Night" and "Hang Fire" appealed to the teeny-bopper metal heads who spent much of the show sucking face with their girlfriends.

"Jumping Jack Flash" was the only encore. The song itself was outstanding, as was the whole show. But with a band as great as the Stones, there are always going to be a few favorites left out. I personally would have liked to hear "Under My Thumb" and "Monkey Man". But hey, you can't have everything.

They show ended with a bang. A fireworks display officially ended the gala.

Metal band tests its fate

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

Change is inevitable. Caterpillars become butterflies, David Lee Roth loses his hair . . . you get the idea. And although in this chaotic world of ours, most of us would prefer that things remain the same so we can maintain a grip on our sanity, change must occur. It is essential to life.

Therefore, taking the laws of nature into consideration, with the release of their fifth album "Perfect Symmetry", it is almost mandatory that Fates Warning offer their fans a new and different sound. And, boy, is this album different. Once producing a progressive thrashy sound, the group has now transcended to a more technical sound, mixing classical and jazz styles in a way that brings progressive metal to new and exciting frontiers. "Basically, we were getting bored with what we were doing and we didn't want to start repeating ourselves. We also didn't want to back ourselves into a corner where people would expect a certain kind of album from us," guitarist Jim Matheos explained. "The best way to get away from that is to expand. It still has the Fates sound because it's still very progressive underneath everything else."

One marked difference in Fates Warning is the absence of their original drummer, Steve Zimmerman. Matheos admits that parting with Zimmerman was bitter and adds, "I guess there's some hard feelings there that will have to be reconciled sooner or later." Hopefully, these hard feelings will be resolved sooner, but for now Matheos and his bandmates, vocalist Ray Adler, guitarist Frank Aresti, and bassist Joe Dibiase, welcome newcomer Mark Zonder.

"It seems weird that a drummer can make that much of a difference in the sound," he says in describing Zonder's influence on the group. "He's more of a jazz drummer. So some of the music that would otherwise sound pretty straightforward and heavy has a couple of little twists to it. He's come up with almost like a melody line on the drums to follow us. So that makes things a lot more interesting and intricate."

In the past, Fates had utilized small keyboard parts of a few tracks from previous albums. This time, they decided to make the keyboards more prominent on one track titled "At Fates Hands." So they enlisted the help of keyboardist Kevin Moore from Dream Theatre. "He's great and we've been friends with those guys for a long time," Matheos states. "So just for the parts we were looking for and since Kevin is such a great player, it just seemed to happen. He was really into it and we had fun."

One particular track off of "Perfect Symmetry" that may

ROCKIN' DAVE AND THE RENT PARTY -leave their front steps for Sheehan's tonight.

Rockin' Dave rocks up and away

By WILLIAM JAMES GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff.

The last time Rockin' Dave and the Rent Party were mentioned in The Collegian, amid a ridiculous amount of adulatory adjectives, they were a raw, very young three member band prone to an infectious energy and enthusiasm. That was in the middle of May, after the boys had come through the strangeness of being a support band for the New York based Lucky 7 at Pearl Street and were placed in the middle of Lucky 7's two sets. They still managed to be more than impressive,in the midst of such managerial silliness, even though they were only two months old.

Over the summer the band has played at Sheehan's as well as doing a five date "mini-tour" of Montreal. They've also integrated a fourth member into the band, Mark Herschler, playing lead guitar and giving backup vocals. Richard Zaft and Brian "Lefty" Harrington continue to keep the beat on bass and drums respectively while Rockin' Dave, as always, blows minds and preconceived notions apart on lead vocals, harmonica, accordion, guitar and charm.

Rockin' Dave

On the subject of Mark Herschler, Rockin' Dave says' "He was just hanging out in our house and we started jamming together and it all worked out. He's definitely paid his [musical] dues, playing all over Europe for the past six years as a busker and in the band The Last Wandering Blues and Jazz Band."

"James Brown meets Buckwheat Zydeco"blare the ads for the bands upcoming gig tonight at Sheehan's That's one way of describing this band that mixes zydeco, soul, rock and roll, and anything else that'll fit. They've also gone from playing about half covers to only doing "about three or four covers , such as "My Girl', in one night," according to Lefty Harrington.

"I'm trying to get away from dissonance, and get a harder edge" said Rockin' Dave about his songwriting and about all the songs he's written over the summer, "You've got to keep going," he said.

To quote Lefty once more, "Dave's songwriting abilities are as a dynamic force behind the band as his performance style." Absolutely.

While Dave does appreciate the maniacal love his performing generates he did note that, "Being big in the Valley is kind of like your mother telling you how good looking you are. It's nice, but if you believe that's reality...I mean look at...whatever,you know what I mean."

The point is that Dave wishes to break out of the Valley without being bitchy. So plans for Boston, New York and Montreal are in the air. The Montreal crowd was especially enthusiastic, "They're real hungry," said Mr. Rockin'.

But for now the most vibrant, fresh and boogie-inducing local band is still in town. A new album is in the works due out in October on the Fly by Night records label. They will also be playing a number of shows this season, starting with Sheehan's tonight and including a tentative gig at the Amherst Common with Gidget Goes to Hell, another of the more accomplished local bands.

Rockin' Dave and the Rent Party are always an affecting, sweaty, live show, good enough to melt the coldest of hearts, as this inky gushing shows. And Rockin' Dave is still "a hundred- twenty-two pounds o' living terror".

Sophisticated Women is on verge of hilarity

Women On the Verge Of a Nervous Breakdown
Amherst Cinema

Spaniard Pedro Almodovar's Women On the Verge Of a Nervous Breakdown is an improbable series of ironies and coincidences stewed in a hearty comic broth.

Pepa is a very disconcerted character. Not even her dwindling barbiturate supply can blot out her torment. In spite of her wealth and renown as a television and voice over personality, she is totally consumed by her lover, whose interest has strayed elsewhere. Her anguish is compounded by dreams she has of him strutting down Madrid past an international flock of excessively attentive beauties attired in their native costumes.

With a carelessly flicked match, Pepa unconsciously sets the bed that she and her lover used to share, on fire. As she stares entranced, she sees her love, whose rich voice and rugged good looks resemble the late Richard Burton, go up in flames.

A distraught Pepa, who can no longer handle the torturous messages her lover leaves on her answering machine pledging his devotion, calls her lover's home. She exchanges choice invective with his displeased wife who has been institutionalized most of her adult life. The wife is a harmless flake caught in a time warp. She wears dated B-52's-style wigs and outfits, all remnants of a happier time in her life.

Pepa's friend, a daffy model, is seeking protection from her lover, a Shiite terrorist who, with two accomplices, plans to blow-up a Stockholm bound plane. Meanwhile, Pepa's lover reserves two seats on it for himself and his new mistress, a feminist lawyer whose legal counsel Pepa seeks for her friend, the daffy model.

But wait, if you are confused now, the plot throws you more hilarious twists and turns. Pepa's lover's son proves he is in the same league as his low-life father by trying to seduce the model.

Noise core hurts

Silverfish
Silverfish
W.I.L.J.A.

You know that feeling you had when you were a wee sprout and had the flu and were sick of everyone being so nice to you? Then you purged yourself on the brand new living room carpet and chuckled to yourself as mommy cleaned it up? That sort of childish glee returns when you listen to Silverfish, the latest noise-core quartet hailing from England.

The four members, Les on vocals, Fuzz on guitar, Chris P. on bass, and Stu on a thrashing drum set, have produced this all by their lonesome.

One listen to songs such as "Dolly Parton" and "Weird Shit" and you'll realize that you don't need to ingest large qualities of drugs to feel you are losing control.

So invite that special someone over, go down to the basement, roll in the slime and play this very loud.

surprise and even shock most of Fates' fans is the commercial sounding "Through Different Eyes." This song screams Dial MTV chart success. But not to worry, this song does not lack the quality lyrics and music that fans have come to expect from Fates Warning. "We wanted to have a song that was accessible, but also very technical. Some people who are not musically inclined might not be able to tell which is good because that's what we like to do. It's a very hard song to play," Matheos emphasizes. "The guitars are playing in another signature. There's a lot of intricate stuff going on, but on top of that, I think we came up with a very catchy melody line to tie the whole thing together. Your average person can hook into it, but then again, the people out there who are musicians can also hook into it."

"Through Different Eyes" could possibly impress many people, but the fact still remains that the commercial quality of this tune has the potential of pissing off a lot of old fans who admired Fates Warning for their heavy sound. "We might be accused of selling out and going commercial. We don't want to lose any of the old fans," Matheos says. "But if they are not prepared to move on with us then, not to sound cruel or unkind, it's better to leave them behind and hopefully gain some new fans."

Amy is in communications. She's learning how to design data transmissions systems and how to link satellites in geosynchronous orbit.
Unfortunately she's never learned how to talk.

Of course, if Amy read The New York Times regularly, she'd find out what the rest of the world actually does with all her communications hardware. Why data lines hum. Why satellites glow 24 hours a day. Why people talk to each other and what they talk about. She might even…eventually…join the conversation.

Amy's fate doesn't have to be yours. Just fill out the coupon or see our representative on campus. We can arrange to put The Times in your hands every morning for an unspeakably low price.

NYNEX strikers want talks with MHC president

SOUTH HADLEY (AP) — Striking telephone workers from New England and upstate New York rallied outside the administration building of Mount Holyoke College yesterday in an unsuccessful attempt to meet with college President Elizabeth Kennan, the only woman on the NYNEX board of directors.

"We came her today to raise the profile of women in the strike," said Steve Early of the Communications Workers of America. "Many of the female employees out on strike are among the lowest paid and are being hit the hardest by the company's proposal to reduce medical benefits."

Early also said NYNEX's proposal to have a fixed 5 percent pay hike considered as a one time bonus, would increase the pay gap between male and female workers. The proposed 5 percent pay increase is nonapplicable to future pay raises.

Meanwhile, talks continued in Boston, with NYNEX and negotiators from the Local 2222 and 2325 concentrating on issues affecting the 15,000 plant workers that include technicians, cable workers, and some clerks.

Union leaders said talks continued to be deadlocked, with neither side willing to make any concessions.

The gathering here followed a rally last week in Boston in which representatives of various feminist groups, including the National Organization for Women, criticized the company's treatment of its women employees.

Kennan was not in her office, but through aides the president sent word to a delegation of striking women that had trooped up the stairs that she does not feel it is appropriate for her to meet with them during the contract negotiations.

She said, however, that she would be agreeable to a meeting with NOW representatives. She also told the strikers that demonstrations on campus must end.

In response, the workers chanted, "We'll be back again and again and again."

Early said the union was agreeable to a meeting through NOW, but rejected any attempt to cut off picketing at the prestigious women's college.

With classes opening today, only a handful of students were on campus when the rally was held.

Dan Czitrom, a history professor and member of the faculty union executive committee, said he expected his committee would consider supporting the strikers at its first meeting next week.

"This is a women's college. Liz is a feminist, and we take issues like this seriously," said Czitrom.

A quartet of sophomores said they were stunned to find the union rally under the president's window one day before classes began. But they thought that Kennan should have met with the workers.

"She has a responsibility to comment," said Erika Von Rautenfeld, of Washington, D.C. "These are serious issues affecting women that are striking for basic needs."

"I was shocked," said Tiffany Slayton, of Minneapolis, Minn., a photographer for the campus newspaper. "She represents all of us on campus when she speaks."

Jack Briggs, a spokesman for NYNEX, said he was surprised the strikers would contend that the company discriminates against women.

"We are recognized as doing an excellent job at hiring women and minorities." he said.

After negotiaitions ended yesterday, Myles Calvey, head of local 2222, said the union "feels frustrated and misled that the company hasn't changed its position from Aug. 5. We never should have come back."

"Just the same as yesterday . . . just spinning our wheels," said John Runkal, head of Local 2325 in Worcester.

John Barry, president of the IBEW, and Morton Bahr, president of the CWA, held a rally following the talks in Boston. They told a crowd of more than 100 strikers to maintain the work stoppage, because of the lack of progress in the talks.

"The officials of NYNEX can't seem to part with money when they made a record amount last year," Barry said.

Bahr said he does not want to see the 32-day-old strike go the course of the Eastern airline strike.

"My experience has been that the longer the strike goes on, the harder it is to settle,' said Bahr.

But Bahr said he would refuse to settle until NYNEX makes a better offer with health care.

"If you wanted to settle [on NYNEX's terms] we would do everything possible to dissuade you," he said.

Bahr assumed workers that none of them would lose their homes because they aren't working, but said they will be "eating an awful lot of oatmeal."

Mass. doctor urges prosecution of soliciting tobacco company

BOSTON (AP) — A Fitchburg doctor said yesterday the U.S. Tobacco Co. mailed free samples of its smokeless tobacco to 15 children of staff members at his hospital and urged the Massachusetts attorney general to prosecute the company.

Dr. Joseph DiFranza of the University of Massachusetts Medical School's family practice residency program in Fitchburg said 20 children under age 18 mailed coupons from a national magazine seeking samples of Skoal Bandits.

DiFranza said 15 of the children received samples back in the mail.

"We feel very strongly that no one should encourage children to use tobacco and we will review any information that is provided to this office," said Mary Breslauer, a spokeswoman for Massachusetts Attorney General James Shannon.

"I am just appalled," said Harry W. Peter, a spokesman for the Greenwich, Conn., based tobacco company. "Our company has had a policy for over 50 years that commits us to discouraging the use of smokeless tobacco by youths."

The children were all related to staff members at Burbank Hospital in Fitchburg, DiFranza said at a news conference sponsored by three health organizations, Doctors Ought To Care, the American Lung Association and the Group Against Smoking Pollution (GASP).

DiFranza said the children broke no laws, since Massachusetts prohibits the sale or distribution of tobacco products to children under 18, but, unlike liquor laws, does not provide any criminal penalties for the children.

The coupon for the free samples asked those seeking them to list their age, and DiFranza said the children simply made up ages.

The samples were mailed in an envelope that said "Tobacco Products For Adults Only."

He said as long as tobacco is distributed by mail, children will have little trouble getting it.

Skoal Bandits, he said, are especially appealing to children because they are flavored with a sweet taste and deliver nicotine in relatively low doses that younger people can tolerate without becoming ill.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Good news regarding a family financial matter puts you in the mood to celebrate. Throw an impromptu party. Help others realize their potential. Emphasize self-improvement projects.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A baleful influence is fading away; you have no regrets. Let others know that you are ready to compromise. An era of good will begin. Romance benefits from improved communication. Speak from the heart.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The contacts you make now may not be your kind of people. Avoid becoming so involved that it will be awkward to break things off. Trust your instincts. Better opportunities lie just ahead.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Involve family members in a home decorating project, urging each child to pick out the colors for his room. Creative self-expression breeds respect and understanding. Large social events are favored tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Guard your love against outside influences or it could disappear like melting snow. Ignore those who offer unsolicited advice. A change of residence is one way to make a fresh start.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Watching sports on television is not half as much fun as seeing a game in person. You will love the feeling of being part of the crowd. Take along your favorite child of teenager.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New faces pop up around you today. With your fondness for socializing, this is bound to be good news. Take the first step and extend a lunch invitation. Nothing ventured, nothing gained!

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov. 21): An aggressive relative or friend is trying to bully you into doing what she wants. Refuse to be influenced, particularly if your money is involved. Work at developing new friendships. Romance beckons.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec 21): Seeing how other people live intrigues you. In fact, you may decide to change your lifestyle. Better eating habits and more rest will giver you new energy. Go for it!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Share the truth with loved ones and you will be surprised by their understanding. Comparison shopping will help make you wiser, more economical choices. Family life comes before romance tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone you meet today will delight you by sharing many of your interests, even the unusual ones. This relationship could become very important to you. Keep in close touch with adult offspring.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your enthusiasm is contagious today. Do your own thing with zest and others will be eager to follow where you lead. Entertain simply and everyone will have just as much fun.

SO ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS SET THE D-MIN TO THE LIGHTEST PART OF THE PHOTO, THEN THE D-MAX TO THE DARKEST PART. ONCE YOU DO THAT, SET THIS BUTTON MARKED DI, WE'RE NOT SURE WHAT IT DOES, BUT IT SEEMS TO HAVE SOMETHING TO DO WITH CONTRAST. EXPOSE THE SHOT, AND IF IT COMES OUT TO LIGHT, EITHER READJUST THE D-MIN TO ALLOW THE MACHINE TO THINK THAT THE PHOTO IS DARKER THAN IT IS, OR LOWER THE D-MAX.
IF THAT DOESN'T WORK, FIDDLE WITH THAT DI BUTTON AGAIN. IF AFTER THAT THE PHOTO STILL LOOKS LOUSY, TRY RECALIBRATING THE LIGHT METER OR CHECKING THE SCREEN FACTOR, WHICH IS DONE BY PRESSING THE THIRD BUTTON DOWN ON THE FAR LEFT TWICE. BUT TAKE CARE NOT TO PRESS THE FOURTH BUTTON DOWN, BECAUSE THAT WILL ERASE ANY PROGRESS YOU HAVE MADE SO FAR

Dave Parker belts a grand slam to help his Oakland Athletics to a 7-5 win over the Red Sox yesterday.

Sox slammed by Oakland, 7-5

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Dave Parker hit his first American League grand slam and Bob Welch won his fifth consecutive decision yesterday as the Oakland Athletics beat the Boston Red Sox, 7-5.

Welch, 16-7, allowed five hits and two runs, one unearned, in five innings before leaving with a slight abdominal strain. He has allowed just four earned runs in his last 35 innings, an ERA of 1.03.

Ellis Burks, who went 3-for-3 for Boston to extend his hitting streak to 15 games, suffered a separated right shoulder in a fifth-inning outfield collision with Mike Greenwell. Greenwell remained in the game until the seventh inning.

The Red Sox scored first — two runs in the third inning. Wade Boggs reached on Walt Weiss' two-base throwing error and scored on Burks' single. Greenwell's double to right on a hit-and-run play scored Burks from first.

Mike Smithson, 7-14, came unraveled in the bottom of the third.

Weiss and Lance Blankenship opened with singles, the A's first hits, and Smithson then hit Rickey Henderson on the left wrist and Carney Lansford on the left elbow on consecutive pitches, forcing in one run. Parker drove the next pitch into the right-field seats for his eighth career grand slam and first since July 1986 with Cincinnati.

Oakland made it 6-2 off Dennis Lamp in the sixth on singles by Dave Henderson and Stan Javier and Weiss' RBI grounder.

Ron Hassey singled in Parker in the seventh for the A's final run.

Parker's homer, the 304th of his career, moved him ahead of Gary Carter for 58th on the all-time list.

Jody Reed pinch-hit a two-run homer for Boston after another error by Weiss, and he celebrated his first major league appearance in the outfield by making two running catches.

Dennis Eckersley, who followed Rick Honeycutt as a reliever for Oakland in the ninth inning, gave up the final run, and Boggs' 48th double of the season, but recorded his 29th save.

Volvo International finds new haven in Conn.

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — The Volvo International tennis tournament will move to New Haven, Conn. next year, after blossoming into a major Grand Prix event during its five years at Stratton.

Officials were to announce yesterday that the tournament will take up residence at Yale University next year, when the tournament will be held two weeks before the U.S. Open.

"It's a great thing for the city of New Haven and gives the state of Connecticut a real shot in the arm as far as tourism and putting New Haven on the map," said Steve Griggs, the men's tennis coach at Yale.

"I'm disappointed but I'm certainly not surprised," said Vermont Development Secretary Elbert Moulton, who spent more than a year trying to keep director James Westhall and his tournament in Vermont.

Besides New Haven, Westhall had been considering sites at Killington and Pittsfield.

Moulton, Vermont's top salesman and Volvo negotiator, said Westhall's decision was based purely on finances. He said Connecticut Gov. William A. O'Neill has pledged $15 million in general obligation bonds for a tennis stadium and complex, while Vermont officials refused any public financing and were even wary of proposals to create a special tax district to finance bonds.

"(Westhall) called me a week ago and expressed some concern over our financial package and a guarantee on a regional tax, and I told him I couldn't guarantee a regional tax," Moulton said.

Vermont Gov. Madeleine Kunin said it was just as well that the tournament was leaving the state. She charged Westhall with playing the potential sites off one another — an allegation Westhall has denied — and said the rush to build facilities in time for next year's tournament could have compromised Vermont's environmental review process.

Kunin, who early on had supported keeping the tournament in Vermont, on Tuesday repeated her recent stance against public funding for a stadium.

"We should never provide state funding for a project like that," she said.

But William Meub, a Rutland attorney who negotiated to bring the tourney to Killington, said he believed the state was short-sighted in letting go of a tournament that was found to have contributed $11.7 million to Vermont's economy last year.

The figure came from a Volvo International survey that also found the tournament added $517,411 to the state's coffers.

Giamatti laid to rest

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A. Bartlett Giamatti, Major League Baseball commissioner and a president of Yale, was laid to rest yesterday after a private graveside service attended only by his family and closest friends.

Burial was in the Grove Street Cemetery, traditional burial site for Yale presidents. Entrance to the cemetery was closely guarded during the service, and the gates were locked immediately after the mourners left.

At least 50 relatives and friends, including Yale President Benno C. Schmidt Jr. and Mayor Biagio DiLieto, attended the 25-minute service. The Rev. Harry B. Adams, the Yale chaplain, officiated.

Giamatti, who was 51, died last Friday after suffering a heart attack at his summer home in Martha's Vineyard. He is survived by his wife, Toni, and three children, Marcus Bartlett, Paul Edward Valentine and Elena Walton Giamatti.

The graveside service began at 11:05 a.m., and less than a half hour later, two policemen on motorcycles led a procession of five cars carrying family members out of the cemetery.

Men's tennis ready for successful year

Strong balance of experience and youth keys '89 Minutemen

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

One of the signs that a program is on the upswing is when a coach gets a wealth of people knocking on the door, trying to get in.

Manny Roberts, University of Massachusetts men's tennis coach, is enjoying the fact that upward of 70 people responded to an open tryout yesterday at the Upper Boyden Courts. Though the roster is mostly set and most of the applicants will have to be turned away, it paints a positive picture for the 1989 Minutemen.

"This is one of the best turnouts we've ever had," Roberts said.

And anyone who may emerge from these tryouts will be joining a solid cast which Roberts hopes will form one of his best teams in recent years.

With three returning starters and three top newcomers, the outlook is good for the UMass men's tennis team.

First and foremost for Roberts is to try and replace graduated senior Brian Gable. Not an easy task, considering Gable was the team MVP four consecutive years and just a tremendous all-around athlete. He was recruited to UMass to play soccer before choosing to play tennis.

"It's sad that he's not back. I wish I could have him for another year," Roberts said. "I don't know of anyone in any other sport who was ever MVP for four years. We'll miss him."

But what Roberts lost in the departures of Gable and starting senior Humberto Soto, he hopes to make up with one of the most balanced squads he's ever had, a true blend of seasoned veterans and highly-touted freshmen.

The big pickup for Roberts was the transfer of Barry Wadsworth from Penn State. Wadsworth, who hails from South Hadley, was the number one singles player for the Nittany Lions and should assume the same position here, helping to ease the loss of Gable a little.

Also coming in to help out are a pair of freshmen, Jeff Hechemy and Lloyd Titlebaum. They will be joining three solid returning players in Paul Audet, Chris Johnson and Rich Stone.

"With those three and the three newcomers, they will form a good nucleus for this team," Roberts said.

Beyond Wadsworth, any of the other five could land in any spot in the six-deep singles lineup. And the same six will most likely split up the three doubles slots, giving Roberts strength from top to bottom.

"We have an extraordinary amount of depth," Roberts said. "It doesn't drop off from one through six. And in doubles, any one of the three teams can play number one and do admirably."

And an added plus is that all seem to have come back to school in fine playing shape.

"They've all played two or three tournaments over the summer," Roberts said. "We've got a lot of hard workers. Everyone is probably in the best shape ever."

With that, Roberts has high expectations for this squad, which went 7-3 last spring.

"We'd like to take the ECAC's in Albany (Sept. 23-24)," Roberts said. "We usually finish in the top five with weaker teams. And last semester we were 7-3. I don't expect to be any worse."

The only thing that could possibly stnd in the team's way is the schedule, which features only two home matches scheduled. But even in that Roberts can find a positive light.

"We're on the road all the time because of a scheduling mix-up. We wound up playing a lot of matches at home last year and they've flip-flopped this year," Roberts said. "Usually we're half and half. But it's just as well. It makes a team more cohesive when they are on the road together all the time."

Roberts is even hoping to sneak a few wins against teams tht usually give the Minutemen a tough go of it.

The UMass men's tennis team hopes to benefit from its schedule, although it will play all but two of its matches on the road.

"With Providence, Hartford and Central Connecticut, it always seems to be 5-4 one way or the other," Roberts said. "With the depth we have, we can turn that around."

The rest of the brief schedule, which wraps up Oct. 14, features road matches at Bentley (the opener next Tuesday), New Hampshire, Connecticut, Boston University and Clark. A recently-added match against Franklin Pierce and a match with Vermont will be the only matches at Upper Boyden this season.

The team competes in both the fall and spring, with the spring season featuring more of the intense tournaments such as the Atlantic 10 tournament and the Easterns.

But unlike other sports that play during the fall but don't keep official records, everything counts in tennis. And the fall season, while still competitive, takes the edge off until spring arrives.

"It seems like the Division I schools and state universities always have spring and fall seasons," Roberts said. "Spring is the big one, but we should have a good season this fall."

Field hockey seeks help from overseas

Hixon lands two key players from Trinidad

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

It is fast becoming a fad in the world of sports to go abroad when searching for new talent. Over the past couple of years, the NBA and NHL have plucked players out of Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union.

Tex Schramm and company are attempting to create a world football league which would place teams in North America as well as Europe. The practice has also been known in the collegiate ranks as well.

Akeem Olajuwon and Manute Bol did not walk off a New York City playground into the NBA. The "Dream" was found playing goalie for a soccer team in Africa and converted into a basketball player at the University of Houston. Bol flew over to Bridgeport from the dark continent.

Now, the University of Massachusetts angle. UMass field hockey coach Pam Hixon, though she is skeptical of recruiting foreign born players, has flew in Phillipa Scott and Sherlan Cabralis, both natives of Arima, Trinidad.

"My philosophy on foreign players to come in for one semester and leave is that it's not fair," Hixon said. "So I really have not got into the foreign market for athletes."

But that philosophy changed for a moment when Hixon's two top goalie recruits decided not to come to UMass. Scott is a goaltender for England's national under-21 team and had expressed an interest in coming to the university.

"I just wanted a scholarship," Scott said. "When I was younger, it was sort of an ambition to get a scholarship over in the states."

The ever resourceful Hixon, whose last two goaltenders have been All-Americans, needed another goalie with sophomore Lisa Charron, the only returning keeper. In December, an opportunity presented itself to the UMass coach.

"Last December, I met her coach at a clinic I did in Barbados and that kind of got the ball rolling even more," Hixon said.

Before Hixon's run-in with Ian Harris, the coach of the Trinidadian national team, Cabralis already was interested in coming to UMass. She had a friend that was a doctoral student in physical education at UMass who recommended to Cabralis that she come to the University. Cabralis is here and she likes it.

"The people are very friendly," Cabralis said. "They smile a lot. The facilities are nice."

Both missed most of the two-week preseason camp because of visa problems but Hixon apparently has a goalie and a midfielder now. Scott has been playing on weekends with the national team and is now getting used to a full-time schedule.

"The practices are really intense," Scott said of her first few UMass practices. "It's been going good. I'm doing more now than I have in such a short period of time."

And on a different surface.

"The fact that the team plays on grass and I'm used to turf is a big difference," Scott said.

She'll see the turf on a lot of the Minutewomen's road trips this season but at UMass, Scott will be playing on Totman Field's foreign grass.

Town inspector boots students from houses

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts fraternity houses and one boarding house are at odds with the town of Amherst building inspector regarding alleged health and safety violations, which resulted in the full shutdown of all three buildings this week.

Building Inspector Richard Gormely said he formally notified residents of Lambda Chi Alpha, of 374 North Pleasant St. and Sigma Phi Epsilon of 375 North Pleasant St. of their eviction last Friday.

Residents of the "North Pleasant Social Club," of 496 North Pleasant St. were also notified, he said. The social club is the temporary name for Theta Chi, which lost University recognition as a fraternity last semester because of numerous social violations.

According to fraternity leaders, the decision has uprooted about 100 students.

"Nobody can live there until I give the certification to live there," Gormely said. "If they're living there, they're living there illegally."

Gormely said the evictions will stand until the fraternity members contact his office and request an inspection. He said those who have failed to vacate the houses risk legal penalties.

Residents of Lambda Chi Alpha were cited for about 25 electrical violations, including improperly installed ceiling fans, lighting fixtures and various wiring problems, he said.

There were also numerous fire hazards, he said, including the lack of a ceiling in the basement recreation room, ill-fitted doors and the lack of a second fire exit from the third floor.

David St. Pierre, vice president of Lambda Chi, said Thursday that all 29 residents have relocated temporarily and pointed out that electricians and contractors are now repairing the house.

However, St. Pierre maintained that town inspectors are unduly harsh on fraternities and sororities, and claimed town residents "want us closed down."

"They think eventually we're going to run out of money," he said of town residents. "The whole Greek system is looked down upon by the town and students."

Gormely, however, denied that the town is treating the fraternities unreasonably and added that he attempted to contact residents of the three houses last week.

Also, he said town inspectors began holding meetings with members of UMass fraternities and sororities last March to prepare for the houses' openings this fall.

"We do it because they fall far behind with these things," he said. "We have to keep their buildings up to code."

Theta Chi, which houses some 40 students, was subjected to a slew of new building code requirements when it changed its name to the North Pleasant Social Club last spring.

The requirements, which compounded existing violations, include the installation of electrical smoke alarms

CUTTING THE RIBBON — Artist Jonathan Kohrman and Marjorie Tuttle, director of the University of Massachusetts Arts Council, cut the ribbon to celebrate the completion of The Civility Mural.

Student's commemorative mural unveiled yesterday

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

When Jon Satz gazed at a blank concrete wall during the "Hands Across UMass" rally held one year ago to denounce racism, he had an idea that would change the University of Massachusetts for years to come.

Thursday, as the UMass Arts Council held a reception to celebrate the completion of the Civility Mural, Satz realized his idea had become a reality.

"As I was standing in "Hands Across UMass" last fall, stretching my arms in either direction, I had the view of this concrete wall by the Campus Center," Satz said.

"I thought, we should jump into that wall," and permanently capture the image of unity among races, he said.

Satz developed this vision and wrote a letter requesting its inception to the UMass Arts Council, who immediately launched an effort to implement the project.

The Civility Mural, which was designed and painted by UMass graduate student Jonathan Kohrman, is intended to "bring about a permanent message about civility issues," said Marjorie Tuttle, director of the UMass Arts Council.

The ribbon-cutting ceremony, which was scheduled to begin at 3 p.m., was stalled for nearly an hour while spectators waited for scheduled speakers Provost Richard O'Brien and Chancellor Joseph Duffey. Both administrators did not attend the event.

After Tuttle and Kohrman introduced the mural, Tuttle addressed a small crowd of students and faculty who gathered to witness the event.

Smith students are taught basics of self-defense

By KATERI WALSH
Collegian Staff

"I thought I was safe here...I don't anymore," said Smith College freshman Heidi Robinson last night following a Self-Defense Workshop added this year to the school's orientation program.

This realization among students was the aim of the workshop, according to Crane Willemse, a self-defense instructor at Smith and one of seven panelists at the workshop.

"While of course we don't want to scare you, it's important that you feel your fear because it's a very important indicator," Willemse said.

The presentation, in front of about 200 people in McConnell Hall, opened with Felicia Otchet's personal account of being pulled into a closet at a Smith college party, knocked to her knees and raped. It was because of that night that Otchet, now a member of the Orientation Committee, saw the need to increase student awareness of sexual assault, harrassment, and rape, as well as the resources available to victims of such crimes.

"I am not alone, and neither are you," said Otchet, who organized the event with Assistant Dean of Student Affairs Carol Weinberg.

Weinberg added, 'It's too easy, especially when you come into a place like Smith that looks physically pleasing, to get lulled into a false sense of security...We want to chip away at that notion that Smith is a Shangri-la."

Weinberg, as well as other panelists, stressed the importance of watching out for each other, and intervening on behalf of peers when they are entering potentially threatening circumstances, saying that students need to be aware that 'they are one of each others most valuable resources."

The discussion stressed a constant awareness of one's situation, surrounding and options. Resources like campus phones, well-lit walkways, student escort services, and campus security were emphasized in the two-and-a-half hour workshop.

"One of the problems of being in an academic setting is that people get so involved in classes and papers that being aware of your surroundings takes a back seat," said Director of Security Sharon Rust.

Willemse, whose hour-long presentation on self-defense techniques highlighted the Fair funds ambulance

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The town of Amherst is sponsoring a second annual community fair on the Amherst Common Saturday in an effort to raise funds to send an ambulance to its sister city in Nicaragua.

The fair, which will be located in the center of town, is scheduled to run from 9:30 a.m. until 4 p.m., according to Faith Turner, co-chair of the Amherst/La Paz Centro Sister City Committee.

The event features a free concert by Metamorphosis, a rock band from Quincy. The group is scheduled to play from noon until 4:30 p.m., she said.

Other highlights of the fair include Latin American food, games for children and a tag sale.

For the past two years, Amherst has been sending aid and medical supplies to La Paz Centro, its tiny sister city in the war-torn Central American country.

Turner said town residents have been attempting to send the ambulance for several months but added that lack of funds and support have stalled these efforts.

Although La Paz Centro is a small city, Turner said its residents have no access to hospitals because of a lack of transportation.

"Their population is [situated] all over the country," she said. "A lot of people lose their lives because they don't have transportation."

If the fair is successful, Turner said she hopes to send the ambulance to the city by January of 1990.

BOG votes to move space allocation date from fall to spring semester

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors last night unanimously approved changing the annual space allocation from the fall semester to early in the spring semester during its first meeting of the year.

Board Vice Chairwoman Liz Hart said that the change would allow Registered Student Organizations to move smoothly, adding that "it takes time to let people know the RSO is moving," through telephone listing and key changes. The new rule would allow RSOs to move over the summer.

Gov. Angela Paquin, who also supported the schedule change, said the previous system of reallocation creates a burden on a new facilities coordinator, who is responsible for moving the groups. "It would be nice for the coordinator to know where the RSOs are before moving them," she said. Paquin also said that it usually takes the coordinator and his or her assistant about a semester to settle into the job.

The BOG also did not take any other action. The board postponed voting on extending the deadline for hiring coordinators and their assistants until early October, allowing for changes in job duties, Hart said.

The board also delayed voting on whether to move five RSOs into offices formerly occupied by the SGA treasurer, president and student trustee. Hart said the three officials left their previous office spaces vacant when they moved to the newly renovated Undergraduate Student Senate office.

Hart praised summer board members Brian Brebner and Bonnie LaMadeleine for their hard work, citing a new agreement with the Parking Office, which would allow banners to be displayed outside the Campus Center Parking Garage. "This is the most industrious summer board in the last five years," Hart said.

BOG Program Council coordinator Jeff Glassman, talking about the Saturn V laser light concert to be held Tuesday night, asked the governors for more help with programming such as the concert.

'I'm in the process of hiring an assistant, but the board is supposed to [do] the brunt of the work," he said.

He also noted that only six members of the 13-member board attended the Judy Tenuta concert, which was partly sponsored by the board.

Later Hart and two other governors volunteered to help with ticket sales and lighting for Tuesday's show.

Many of the governors said they looked forward to the year ahead. Hart said, "I do hope we can be the best we can."

BOG treasurer Lisa Balentine said, "It's going to be an interesting year."

And LBGA member Ben Eder, who said he was going to be officially appointed to a BOG seat next week, said, "I really look forward to working with you. You seem to be really reasonable people."

Balloon, clowns, singers highlight fair

Bluewall concert is slated for tonight

By DONALD McCULLOCH
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts had the air of a carnival Thursday as the First Week Field Day event drew scores of students and area residents to celebrate the kickoff of fall semester, 1989.

Highlights of the event ranged from the unveiling of the Civility Mural outside of the Campus Center to rides in a 70-foot-high bright orange hot air balloon.

> "It relieves the stress of Add/Drop."

The Field Day, which was organized by the Student Activities Office and the Commuter Area Government, is part of this year's First Week celebration held annually to welcome students to the University.

Acting CAG President Clarinda Rose-Turner, who organized the event, said the six-day celebration, which included several sold-out movie showings and the giving away of more than $5,000 worth of prizes, was a great success for the University.

"It relieves the stress of Add/Drop," she said. "It was fun to organize."

Rose-Turner, who coordinated several campus groups to run the event, said the hot air balloon was an innovative addition to the traditional fireworks and other displays which have highlighted First Week events in the past.

The Balloon School of Massachusetts, Inc., located in Palmer, supplied the 77,000 cubic foot hot air balloon. Pilot Clayton Thomas allowed students to ride in the balloon for a small fee.

Although the balloon was capable of reaching altitudes of 10,000 feet, for safety purposes the balloon hovered only 50 feet above the ground.

Field day encompassed a wide assortment of activities and exhibits, including tarot card readings by the Pagan Society by the campus pond.

The pond was also the site for colorful illustrations as artists transformed the faces of students as well as small schoolchildren into beaming clowns and other animated designs.

Musical and visual entertainment abounded, featuring performances by members of the juggling club to the strains of folk music by vocalists Dee Herrera and Kim Zombik, a UMass student, with guitarist Ralph Seaman.

Zombik and Herrera, who sang well into the evening, are favorites on campus. Zombik sang at the pro-choice rally held on campus last spring and has performed at local coffee houses.

Zombik, a blues and ballad singer, was joined occasionally by Greg Terkelson, who was performing in public for the first time.

First Week will culminate tonight with a rock concert from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in the Bluewall in the Campus Center. The concert features three Boston-based bands, Chucklehead, a rap group, heavy metal band Savage Garden, and Meta Terra, an alternative rock band.

State funds to program questioned

BOSTON (AP) — The state paid as much as $250,000 in Medicaid funds to a Holyoke methadone program when state regulations were unclear as to the program's eligibility and despite a warning from a Welfare Department worker.

The Boston Herald reported yesterday it was told by an unidentified source that the 1988 payment was being investigated by the attorney general's Medicaid fraud unit, but a spokeswoman for the office would not confirm or deny that.

The newspaper said it obtained two internal Welfare Department memos pertaining to payment to Providence Hospital in Holyoke for running a methadone program.

Michal Regunberg, a Welfare Department spokeswoman, confirmed yesterday the payments were made, but defended them as good public policy.

"There is a war on drugs out here now and good public policy is that we should get people treatment," she said.

In a February 22, 1988, memo to Charles Atkins, then state welfare commissioner, Russ Beliveau, then a Welfare Department employee, wrote:

"We have identified an overpayment of approximately $250,000 to Sisters of Providence in Holyoke for claims which appear to be supporting methadone treatments, which we are not currently liable for.

"There is a possibility that we may even be paying for transportation to these treatments. Assuming these suspicions are true, we want to recover any monies paid inappropriately.

"On the other hand, recent changes in the philosophy around methadone treatments would indicate that Medicaid will be picking up this service as a legitimate Medicaid benefit. I am looking for your advice on how to proceed in regard to this issue."

The Herald said that at the bottom of the memo, Bob Master, former director of medical services for Medicaid, wrote: "Chuck, I would strongly advise leaving this alone. If Russ is correct, Sisters of Providence has been using Medicaid [monies] to expand methadone maintenance."

Parking fines go for student scholarships

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts accumulated more than $400,000 from parking and speeding ticket fines last year, said Dr. Arthur Jackson, director of the UMass Financial Aid Department.

All of the money collected in parking infraction fines was placed in the UMass Traffic Fines Scholarship, providing money for the largest scholarship coffer the University offers. The scholarships are financed exclusively through the collection of these traffic fines.

About 450 in- and out-of-state students were awarded the scholarship for the 1989-90 school year, according to the department.

"This scholarship is awarded to the financially needy students who have already applied for financial aid," Jackson said

Parking Manager Lynn Braddock estimated that approximately 50,000 to 60,000 parking and speeding tickets are given out each year at the UMass campus.

"Not only students, but anyone who parks on this campus illegally will be ticketed," Braddock said.

RSO prepares to fight against SAO decision

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

The shake-up of inactive Registered Student Organizations this summer has left the Massachusetts Pre-Law Society feeling left out in the cold.

The society and 70 other RSOs had their accounts eliminated as part of a joint housecleaning operation by the Student Government Association and the Student Activities Office.

Laura Filkins, treasurer of the SGA, said the society's account was eliminated partly because she felt she could not trust the group's director, Nathan Moore.

Filkins said she had questions about Moore's ability to hold signature power to access funds from the group's account. These questions concerned Moore's two-year term as SGA Budget Committee chairperson, which ended in 1987, she said.

"There were questions about his misuse of funds when he was chair of Budgets Committee," said Filkins.

Also, she said it was unclear who the society's legitimate officers were.

Sue Jean, associate director of SAO, said the confusion about who the group's legitimate officers was the primary reason the account was eliminated.

Jean said an updated officer listing file was one of the criteria used to decide if an RSO was still active.

However, Moore, who claims he is director of the Pre-Law Society, maintains his group made it clear last semester to both the SGA and the SAO who their officers were and that they were still an active RSO.

He said the society held a tenants rights workshop last spring, which about 15 people attended, and that they scheduled a room in the Campus Center to show a movie to raise funds for the group. Moore said since their account was frozen, society members used personal funds.

Moore said Filkins made it difficult for the society to prove it was an active group because she refused to unfreeze the society's account last semester.

The controversy about the society's leadership apparently began during Fall 1988 when two different parties tried to restart the society, which had been inactive for more than a year.

SAO records show that Moore filed an officer listing on September 8, 1988, a step to prove to SAO had active officers in the group. Five days later student Daniel Collins filed a similar form stating he was the president of the society.

Margaret Arsenault, the SAO adviser assigned to the society, said both Collins and Moore claimed they were in charge of the group.

"They both came in upset,"said Arsenault. "Dan said he was concerned at seeing Nate's flyers advertising the society. He had heard that Nate said he was president. Dan said he was interested in geting the group going."

Arsenault said after the first meeting Collins did not return to SAO.

Moore said he waited to see if Collins would restart the group before making another attempt at organizing the society.

Moore said in an interview Wednesday that he plans to examine taking legal action against the SGA as a result of the action.

"(The SGA) violated their own due process," said Moore.

Moore cited the SGA's failure to advertise for three weeks prior to removing an RSO's registration, as stipulated by the SGA constitution.

However John Dunlap, speaker of the Student Senate, said only the organization's accounts were eliminated and the SGA will soon advertise the impending de-registrations.

Brian Crawford, Treasurer of Pre-Law, said the group is in a "Catch-22" situation.

"Without funds and without being able to sign for meeting rooms, we can't do anything to prove we're active," he said.

Moore also noted the society's mailbox was taken away making it difficult for interested new members to get in touch with them.

Navy said Iowa explosion intentionally set

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy said today that gunner's mate Clayton Hartwig "probably caused" the USS Iowa explosion that killed 47 sailors by placing a detonating device in the bags of gunpowder in the battleship's 16-inch guns.

Hartwig, who died in the April 19 blast, was the gun captain in charge of the loading of the No. 2 gun turret and the sailor investigators placed nearest the breech of the ill-fated weapon. The tragedy ranks as the worst naval disaster since the Vietnam war.

The Navy, which released its 1,100-page report today at the Pentagon, said its investigation could not pinpoint a precise reason for the blast, given that "the personnel most knowledgeable of actions and intentions were those who lost their lives."

However, the Navy said, "The explosion was most probably caused by an intentional act. The weight of evidence indicates that some type of detonation device was deliberately placed between the powder bags being rammed into the breech of the center gun."

"The most likely person with the access, knowledge and possible motivation to accomplish this act has been identified as Gunner's Mate 2nd class Clayton M. Hartwig, USN, the center gun captain in turret II at the time of the explosion," the Navy said.

The center gun turret exploded during the gunnery exercises about 330 miles northeast of Puerto Rico. The weapons aboard the World War II-era battleship can fire 2,700 pound of black gunpowder.

Adm. Leon Edney, the vice chief of naval operations; Rear Adm. William Schacte, the head of the Naval Investigative Service; and Rear Adm. Richard Milligan, who led the inquiry, briefed reporters on the findings.

Navy officials acknowledged that the report's conclusions about Hartwig were based on circumstantial evidence. But they contend that this evidence, combined with an exhaustive FBI and Naval Investigative Service study into the blast, supports their theories. Hartwig's sister, Kathy Kubicina of Cleveland, said in advance of the report's release that she expected the Navy to implicate her brother but that "none of the guys on the Iowa believe my brother blew up the turret."

She said she expected lawyers representing her family to file a lawsuit in an attempt to clear her brother's name.

Hartwig became a focus of the investigation after his sister wrote Navy officials after the explosion to complain that he had named another Iowa crewman, Petty Officer Kendall Truitt, as beneficiary of a $100,000 life insurance policy.

Despite months of speculative reports, the report contain no assertions that Hartwig was a homosexual, although it does paint a picture of him as a loner with few close friends who could have committed suicide.

Milligan cited in his section of the report an FBI analysis of Hartwig that said: "Clayton Hartwick died as a result of his own actions; staging his death in such a fashion that he hoped it would appear to be an accident."

The report said investigators found that Hartwig had experimented with explosive devices and detonators, had frequently talked about dying and had a fascination with ship disasters.

They said Hartwig had recently had a falling-out with an extremely close friend and that on the night before the explosion his attempts at entering into "a close relationship with another sailor had been rejected.'

Frank defends fixing parking tickets of aide who was on official business

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Barney Frank said yesterday he used his congressional immunity to void parking tickets incurred by a personal aide who was also a male prostitute, but only when the assistant had used Frank's car for official business.

Frank, D-Mass., said he allowed the aide, Stephen L. Gobie, to use his car for official business and also gave him authorization to drive it when the congressman was out of town.

The lawmaker had said earlier that he hired Gobie in July 1985 as his housekeeper and driver, paying him from personal funds, and fired him in August 1987.

Frank, an acknowledged homosexual who has asked that his situation with Gobie be investigated by the House ethics committee, issued a statement on the parking tickets after a story on the subject appeared in yesterday's Washington Times.

"Part of Mr. Gobie's duties was the use of my car on official business and access to my car when I was away from Washington," Frank's statement said. "There are some occasions when tickets were issued even though the car was being used on official business. I did ask that such tickets be waived. At all other time, it was my policy to pay for tickets incurred."

Frank branded as "lies" Gobie's assertion to the Times that the lawmaker had knowingly intervened to waive the tickets the aide received while using Frank's car to keep appointments for illicit sex.

Gobie told the Times he always left Frank's official congressional plate on the dashboard when he used the car. He said Frank's car was ticketed about 50 times over a year-and-a-half.

Frank has said he paid Gobie $80 for sex after answering a classified ad in Washington gay newspaper in the spring of 1985.

The representative said he then hired Gobie as his housekeeper and driver, hoping to change his ways, but fired him when he found out Gobie was using Frank's apartment to operate a prostitution ring.

In yesterday's statement, Frank said, "These and all other issues are rightfully before the House ethics committee at my request and will be dealt with in detail."

Carmen Canino, now welfare commissioner, signed off on the memo, writing, "Make sure we do not recover any money."

Matthew Pszenizzny, vice president of operations at the hospital, told the Herald, "Our belief is it has always been a reimbursable expense. We have done this for the last 19 years. No one told us it was an ineligible service."

Regunberg, a spokesowman for the welfare department, said the payment was allowed because of a policy decision by the agency.

"In face of the mounting AIDS epidemic, [we] made a policy decision to allow methadone treatment to be covered under Medicaid," she said.

"Because methadone treatment in this setting was permitted under the state and federal Medicaid program, the department allowed payments to" the hospital, she said. She said the department is in the process of expanding eligibility for methadone treatment from out-patient settings at hospitals to free-standing clinics and other sources.

"It was felt that given the regulations were silent, it would be sending the wrong message to go after a provider. A lot of the people they were serving were high-risk pregnancy cases," Regunberg said.

General criticizes U.S., then asks for help

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gen. Michel Aoun said yesterday that U.S. foreign policy is "biased and shortsighted," then asked American help in what the Christian leader calls the war of liberation against Syrian troops in Lebanon. Aoun said the U.S. withdrawal of its last diplomats Wednesday was based on "rumors, false suppositions and unconvincing reasons."

He likened the 6-month-old battle between his 20,000 Christian soldiers and a Moslem alliance led by the 40,000 Syrians to what Americans' "forefathers did... 200 years ago" in the Revolutionary War.

Syrians and Christians exchanged artillery fire for five hours before dawn yesterday and police reported two dead and seven wounded.

The U.S.-trained general said he would welcome the return of Ambassador John McCarthy and other American diplomats to Lebanon only if Washington recognized his Christian Cabinet as the legitimate government.

His government competes for power with a Moslem Cabinet led by acting Premier Salim Hoss. McCarthy, who had been in Lebanon since the rival regimes were created a year ago, avoided taking sides by not presenting his credentials to either.

U.S. military helicopters evacuated the 30 remaining Americans from the U.S. Embassy compound in east Beirut on Wednesday morning.

"It is pitiful that American-Lebanese relations should deteriorate to that point due to the stubbornness of the American Embassy ... backed by a biased and shortsighted foreign policy," Aoun said.

He was clearly angered by the State Department's declaration Wednesday that it evacuated the U.S. diplomats because Aoun threatened to expose them to a "good dose of Christian ???is bunker under the shattered presidential palace in Baabda, east of Beirut, the 54-year-old Maronite Catholic general urged the "American people and their elected representatives to ignore their State Department's policy."

Americans should "should support all the Lebanese, Moslems and Christians, in our war of liberation" against the Syrians, he said.

State Department spokesowman Margaret Tutwiler said Wednesday that a leader of Christian youths who massed outside the embassy before the evacuation told diplomats they cold move in and out of the compound only "at their own risk."

Aoun said her remarks were "a calculated but crude personal attack on me."

"It is an attack perhaps born of desperation rather than exaspeation at the continued Lebanese resistance, and based at best on half truth, hearsay and downright black propaganda, at which we all known the State Department excels," he told journalists.

Tutwiler quoted Aoun as saying in an interview with the French newspaper Figaro that "perhaps he should take 20 American hostages."

In the interview published September 1, Aoun was asked whether the United States was putting pressure on France not to aid him, and replied in part:

"They put pressure on everyone and claim in addition to have so acted because they have 10 hostages being held in Lebanon. As if the war were being waged without hostages or victims. If I understand well, it would be enough that tomorrow I take 20 Americans hostage so that the United States stops putting pressure on my friends."

Eight Americans are among the 16 Western captives in Lebanon.

After Aoun's news conference Thursday, Tutwiler repeated her feeling about the remark to Figaro: "I view it as a threat."

Aoun was not asked about it during the news conference.

The general said he had assigned his "best officers and soldiers" to protect the embassy and American diplomats. He said the decision to evacuate them was "unjustified ... because there have never been any victims or any hostage-taking in this region at all since the current events started."

His reference was to the 310-square-mile enclave north and east of Beirut in which an estimated 1 million Christians live. It has been sealed off by the Syrians and their Moslem allies.

Colombian in U.S. for trial

ATLANTA (AP) — The reputed financial wizard of the Medellin cocaine cartel arrived under guard at a tiny, out-of-way airport before sunrise Thursday, the first of Colombia's "Extraditables" brought to the United States for trial.

The extradition of Eduardo Martinez Romero, an alleged money-launderer for the drug cartel that is believed to supply 80 percent of America's cocaine, came days after President Bush declared war on Latin America's cocaine barons.

Martinez, 36, was put on a Drug Enforcement Administration plane in Bogota on Wednesday night. He arrived at 4 a.m. outside Atlanta at Charlie Brown Airport, an airfield used mostly by private planes, and was whisked to court by helicopter.

Hours later, after the government obtained an interpreter for him, he appeared before U.S. Magistrate Joel M. Feldman and told him he speaks only Spanish and does not fully comprehend the money-laundering charges against him.

Feldman postponed arraignment until Monday and ordered Martinez held without bail at an undisclosed site. Defense Attorney Ed Garland said even he had not been told where Martinez was being held.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Wilmer Parker III said he will ask that bail be denied.

Security at the courthouse was unremarkable, despite the wave of bombings associated with Colombia's crackdown on drugs, which resulted in Martinez's arrest August 20. Martinez was not handcuffed or shackled in court.

The Medellin cartel's reputed money man is on the United States' list of so-called "Extraditables," Colombia's most important drug kingpins.

Martinez, who told the judge he holds a post-graduate degree in marketing, is accused of laundering up to $27 million in drug profits by funneling the cash through U.S. banks, including one in Atlanta.

He is the first person extradited to the United States since Colombia's crackdown began last month.

Martinez has previously denied any links to the Medellin cartel, which the government claims is the largest cocaine operation in the world.

"Based on what I heard today I would anticipate he will enter a plea of not guilty," said Garland. The Atlanta lawyer said he was contacted by a member of Martinez's family.

Martinez was indicted in March in Atlanta as a result of an investigation code-named Operation Polar Cap, which officials said revealed an operation that laundered billions in cocaine profits.

In March, U.S. authorities enlisted the aid of General Manuel Noriega's military to help arrest Martinez while he was inside a Panama City bank. But Martinez slipped though the dragnet, according to the DEA.

He was arrested in Colombia the first weekend after Colombian President Virgilio Barco launched a drug crackdown prompted by the August 18 assassination of a presidential candidate and outspoken foe of the drug trade.

ARMY PATROL — Colombian military police in a jeep with a mounted machine gun patrolled the streets in the capital Thursday. Security measures continue to be strict after the cocaine cartel vowed to kill 10 judges for each drug suspect extradited to the United States. On Wednesday the U.S. extradited a major cartel suspect, Eduardo Martinez Romero.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

A few simple questions

It does not take a whole lot to realize the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is a financial disaster area.

We have a few simple questions for Gov. Dukakis:

You have cut $23.5 million from our budget in the past two years. When will you stop cutting? Do you realize the damage you are doing to people's lives, the grief you are putting both student and faculty through? What do you want from our campus?

Is there a master plan? Will we get retribution? Will you ever speak at UMass-Amherst again to inform us of your goals for the state's education system? Will you talk to students to learn about our lives, our needs, and how those goals and needs have been put on hold as we spend endless hours in add/drop lines, praying that we get the classes needed to graduate on time?

Do you care?

These are questions we, as students, faculty and staff of this University, need answered.

Gov. Dukakis, you are making our lives miserable. Prepare for an onslaught of protests and letters. Our school may be financially dead, but our spirits are still strong.

An appreciation of Amherst

When most students they hear the name Amherst, they think of UMass. It's quite natural to associate the two. We eat, sleep, go to class and socialize in and around campus. But most of us forget that there is a real town with real people living along with us.

Minu Sebastian

What are the impressions most of us have of Amherst?

People sell tye-dyes here.

People farm here and it smells like manure.

People don't shop here. There are only two malls nearby, one has only a single floor and the other one is dead so it doesn't count.

People are "liberal" here. There's a man who sits in the center of town and sings. (And no one arrests him?!)

When I first decided to live in Amherst this summer, most people thought I was crazy and asked me questions like, "Who will you talk to?" and "What will you do?" Amherst doesn't close down for the summer. All of the shops are open, and there are people around.

By living here this summer I have realized that there is something unique about Amherst and its residents. Most people that live here seem to know each other and are very friendly. People are relaxed and laid back. No one seems uptight or nervous about anything. In my hometown, a typical suburb, no one really talks to each other and everyone is in a rush to get things done.

There is also a social and cultural awareness that is prevalent in Amherst and the surrounding area. On the cover a local newspaper there was an article about a couple who had refused to pay federal taxes for a number of years because they did not want their money wasted on nuclear arms and defense, and the IRS was planning to take their house away. This enraged the residents who decided to try to find ways to help the couple. If this couple had been living in my hometown, most people would have called them communists and tried to help get them arrested. People of Amherst are also concerned with the environment. There are various action groups in town, Greenpeace, MassPIRG and Clean Water. Most of these groups go door to door trying to make people aware that they can improve their town and environment.

People also care about world peace and politics. I went to a reggae concert on the pond where a group was singing about the South African struggle. The concert attracted most of the people of the town who thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated the group.

Even the children were aware of what was going on in South Africa. This amazed me because when I was growing up I never was aware of world politics, and most people of my town could care less about the situation in South Africa. They are more concerned with who is going to win the next Pee Wee football game.

I am impressed with the people of Amherst area. They genuinely seem to care about real issues such as the defense budget and environmental problems. They are aware of political events, and some are willing to stand up for what they believe in.

There's definitely more to Amherst than UMass.

Suspicious suspensions

Every summer, while students are lying on the beach or flipping burgers, the University administration is busy solving problems.

A few years ago, they solved the student lawsuit problem by stripping the student financed Legal Services Office of the power to litigate. This left students at the mercy of Amherst landlords, and other assorted vermin.

Al Arpad

After that, they solved the alcohol problem by instituting a revised, stringent alcohol policy — without student input. Summer is the perfect time for solving problems because all the hopelessly uncouth students can't interfere.

This summer, the Student Activities Office had a new problem.

It seems they were working too hard and spending too much of the Student Activities Trust Fund on student activities. In order to make things more efficient, they initiated the suspension of 69 Registered Student Organizations, in blatant violation of the Student Government Association bylaws.

In all fairness, it appears that some of the organizations had been inactive for some time. According to Senate Speaker John Dunlap, previous SGA Registrars had failed to keep their files in order. A good housecleaning was overdue. But SGA bylaws governing student organizations are purposely designed to protect all groups from arbitrary suspension and harassment, and those regulations were ignored.

After determining that an organization is inactive according to fairly strict criteria, the SGA Registrar (not the Student Activities Office) must, according to the bylaws, place ads in 3 consecutive issues of the Collegian announcing the pending suspensions, and then must wait an additional 2 weeks for a response. Since the Collegian does not publish during the summer, this clearly was not done.

The list of suspended organizations is diverse, but there are indications that some were suspended for reasons other than inactivity. The Student Activities Office has so far been reluctant to discuss those reasons.

One group, the Massachusetts Pre-Law Society, has already charged that they were targeted for elimination early last year in retaliation against one of their officers, former SGA Budgets Committee chair Nate Moore. Moore has been a frequent critic of the policies at the Student Activities Office. Several other groups will probably appeal the suspensions as well.

The handful of student leaders who remained in town over the summer were apparently unable to prevent the premature suspension of the groups. They are now promising new bylaws to make the job of the Registrar more workable. Until it becomes clear that the Student Activities Office will abide by whatever regulations are in place, the Student Senate should approve no changes. In order to demonstrate its good will, the Student Activities Office should immediately reinstate all the suspended organizations until the requirements of the bylaws have been met.

Obviously, paternalistic administration is common throughout the University. Distrust of the system is a big reason why so few students have gotten personally involved in the fight to roll back the budget cuts. The quickest way for students to assert their interests is through responsible representation in the Student Senate.

If you want the Student Activities Office to be held accountable to students, find out who represents your residential area in the Student Senate. Many senators graduated last spring, so your area may not be represented at all. If you are a member of a suspended organization, go to the Student Senate meeting next Wednesday, talk to your Area Government, and if all else fails, write to the Collegian.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Well, here I am back in the old basement and nothing has changed. The place is a pit, and nothing is working really well. As usual. So I must admit, I am slightly bummed out that I'm not bouncing around Europe any more, but I know no one really wants to hear about it. So here is the first and last column where I drone on about my adventures:

First I ought to say that if I were to write a book about my travels and times there it would most definitely be called Let's Go Dante's Hell.

Yes, I too used that bright orange book, which sometimes was as valuable as a credit card and at other times as pathetic as Dan Quayle, allowing me to at least locate other poor, lost, ENGLISH speaking tourists.

Here are the important phrases I learned while there: BTDT — been there, done that; Vini, Vidi, Visa — I came, I saw, I charged!

You are probably wondering where I went, so here goes (minus the four months I studied in Angers, France. That's pronounced On-jay, Phraw-antz.) I spent a week in Paris, then was in school until Easter when I took a 17-day break.

Peter Leon

You all went to Florida? Well I went to Rome, where I got mugged. In Venice, I met a French kid and spent eight hours walking around there speaking French. (Italy, I was in Italy!!!)

Next stop was Cologne, West Germany, thus making it necessary to walk up the something like 1,500 stairs to the top of the cathedral, and then biking 40 miles round trip to see a castle.

Then I drove through East Germany, comrades, to get to Berlin. Stopping at the border was interesting. There were all these unhappy looking men with these fully automatic rifles who looked at me like I was an alien. But I made it to Berlin, where I tried to visit the East side. No one told me that I needed a 25 D-mark to get across. Oh well.

Then it was back to France, where I spent some time in Paris. I went for a long weekend in London, then for a couple of weekends on the French Riviera. Took my finals, then went ,off to Ireland. I went through withdrawal from caffeine there, then took the land route to the Netherlands. Amsterdam is everything you have heard . . . and more.

Then I went back into Germany, down the east coast of France back to Paris and left for home.

Speaking of which, ya know what the best part of going away is . . . coming home.

Thus, 'til next week, keep on top of those fascist conservatives, upwind from those stinking liberals, and be moderately mellow!

in every room, a project the fraternity's president Paul Silva said is costing the organization some $7,000.

Sigma Phi Epsilon, which returned to campus this month after a two-year absence, is leasing its house from the now-defunct fraternity, Alpha Tau Gamma. ATG was terminated last semester because of hazing violations.

Gormely said he notified the building's landlord, James Mulchahy, and four members of Sigma Phi of their eviction Friday.

He cited a loose hand railing in the third floor stairwell, several broken windows and doors, bare electrical wires and incomplete sheet rock work as reasons for the notice.

According to Sigma Phi President John Silveria, the fraternity was not notified of their eviction. Some 16 members have moved in and are continuing to live in the house, he said.

In an interview and tour of the house Thursday, Silveria pointed out two new doors, newly-painted rooms, a renovated bathroom, and a repaired stairwell.

"No one even came and talked to any of us," Silveria said. But, he added, the fraternity has not contacted Gormely to request an inspection.

mural

"This is a mural for the students and by the students so I hope you take pride in it," she said. "There is a pertinent message in the mural and I hope students will personally think of their own thoughts on racism and cultural diversity and think about their actions as well."

Tuttle went on to say that although the mural commemorates Civility Day 1988, it also serves as a symbol for civility activities in the future, including the upcoming Civility Week.

"I think we have to identify what a multi-cultural campus should be and work towards that," she said.

Kohrman, a painting major who received his undergraduate training from Harvard University and UMass, was commissioned to design and paint the mural by the UMass Arts Council last winter. He received a stipend from the University for his efforts.

Kohrman researched the mural, which illustrates local and universal events involving racism, for two months before beginning work.

"I talked to a whole diversity of people and I think what I figured out was that this whole issue of civility is about is trying to find your way in knowing someone better," he said.

presentation, emphasized listening to one's intuition, and said that "there are cases when it is O.K. to hurt someone permanently, to maim an attacker who has not taken your life into consideration."

Willemse described her 'five fingers of self-defense.' She said to first use your head to think, then use your voice to yell, then your feet (or wheels) to get away. Then she said you must fight back and resist, and finally, she said, tell someone. "A well-placed blow will stun an attacker for several seconds," she said, "and that is just what you need to get away."

Willemse identified the eyes, throat and knee-caps as the three "prime targets."

ARTS & LIVING

First Week ends with three band rock n'roll explosion

By ROBERT FISCHER
Collegian Correspondent

Friday, September 9 at 8:30 p.m., the University of Massachusetts will close First Week 89 with a night of rock music at the Bluewall.

Three area bands, Savage Garden, Chucklehead and the Bozo Patrol Horns, and Meta Terra will perform. The free event will also include dancing, door prizes, and snacks, and is well worth missing a party to go to.

Chucklehead is sure to be like nothing you have seen before. They are quite a refreshing change from the usual drek that plays free gigs. This unique group is incredibly talented, creative, and easy to dance to. They do the impossible by intertwining an enormous number of different styles, like rap, funk, jazz, and soul, that you don't often see together. The music has a definitive beat that is easy to get into.

The band, which was formed last October, has rapidly grown from four to eight members. They originated in Connecticut, but have since moved to Boston, where they now do most of their gigs.

Chucklehead's drummer, Erik Attkisson, is incredible as he varies every few bars with dynamic fills and subtle accents. And the band's sound as a whole, with Eben Levy on guitar, Brian Gotteman on keyboards, and Dave Rengil on bass, is awe inspiring.

The horn section, complete with synchronized dance moves, is also very tight and consists of Rob Nahf on alto sax, John Ray Schacther on tumpet, Len Alkins on tenor sax, and Huck Bennet on tenor and baritone sax and guitar.

The band puts out a wide array of sounds, many of which would seem impossible to do except in a studio. However, according to Levy (who also produces the band) that is not the case.

"We try to play everything live," Levy said. "Our keyboardist puts in a new disk before every song.

"We are really interested in playing live," Levy said. "Our music is strictly for floor dancing. We look for audience participation. If they don't participate, then we try harder to make them do so. We try to make things wild and we try to be friendly with the audience."

Savage Garden is a completely different band than Chucklehead. Sounding like the current college sound, the band could easily be mistaken for the Alarm, REM, or U2.

Savage Garden formed five months ago in Boston. They've gone from small support act to major club headliners in a short amount of time. The bands self-titled tape, produced by Paul Kolderie (who also produces Living Colour), is already on its second pressing.

The band consists of David Wilman on lead vocals, acoustic, and "distorted acoustic" guitar, Glen Selmi on bass, and Nick McManus on drums.

Savage Garden really seems to be on the way up. They have recieved local radio airplay, and have played in front of 2000 people at an Amnesty International Benefit on Boston Common. But with their easily accessable college sound, this is hardly surprising.

The band is technically excellent. But the one thing that is not present is an exploration of new music territory.

If you like to watch good live bands and like the college sound, then go see this band, but don't expect to see something new.

Meta Terra is the other extreme. Their music is easy to dance to and the instruments are played flawlessly. But the group is very new age sounding with a vocalist who sounds like Richard Marx.

The music is soaring and spiritual with a strong solid beat, but the lyrics repeat much too often. This band may warrant more investigation tonight.

Bauhaus
Swing the Heartache, The B.B.C. Sessions

Martin Gore
Counterfeit

First,there was Bauhaus. Then Daniel Ash and Kevin Hoskins joined up with Glen Compling to form the very short lived Tones on Tails. Now the members of Bauhaus, minus guru Peter Murphy are calling themselves Love and Rockets and are riding high on the success of their top ten pop chart single "So Alive". But let us never forget that first there was Bauhaus. And just to make sure that we don't forget, the album Swing the Heartache; The BBC Sessions was released this August commemorating Bauhaus' tenth anniversary.

Performing Arts holds open house

The Performing Arts Division (PAD), in cooperation with the Fine Arts Center and the Department of Music and Dance, will host an informal open house, on Sunday, September 10, from 2 -5 p.m. in Old Chapel at the University of Massachusetts.

At 2 p.m., people will be able to register for music, theater, and dance study at PAD.

At 4 p.m., people will be able to consult with PAD faculty, who will answer questions.

Fall offerings at PAD will include acting, group guitar, piano, voice, ballet, dance exercises, tap, modern dance and jazz dance.

PAD will also offer special coursework, including Stage Presence in Performance, Alexander Technique, Suzuki programs in music, Kodaly sightreading, classical and folk dance of India, Vocal Swing Choir and Guitar Ensemble. Most of the courses pertain to performance art, and they are perfect for theater majors who are having trouble getting classes. In many cases, students will recieve credit for the courses that they take.

A new course, Asian Dance History, will present the history and development of dance styles of Asian countries. Videos and live performances by Cambodian, Indian and Japanese dancers enhance the course, which was developed to the growing public interest in the Asian community of the people of the Pioneer Valley.

Walk-in registration at PAD ends on September 21. Private instruction and consultations with PAD faculty are available on a year-round basis.

The album is a collection of rare recordings Bauhaus made at the BBC studios in London. Apparantly, they were recorded with the supposed intention of to be broadcast on radio, but instead Bauhaus used the opportunity to "explore off-the-record ideas". The sessions were mostly recorded live in studio and enabled the band to experiment.

Don't think of Swing the Heartache; The BBC Sessions as a best of Bauhaus because it is not. The aim of the BBC producers was to release a "classic ", rather than "best of" collection. In fact, only five of the songs on this album ever made it to official album release. Most of the cuts were used as B-sides, or just played during sound checks before shows.

To predict the success of Heartache would be a tricky thing. One one hand, all the die-hard Bauhaus fans could very well jump on this release and cherish it. Although some of the cuts on it are also on Bauhaus; The Singles 79-83, the live versions offer nice variations.

On the other hand, for those who don't know about Bauhaus, or just like Love and Rockets, Heartache might be a little hard to swallow. The first two sessions are raw, unpolished, and loud, and re-emphasize the punk influences in Bauhaus songs. The album also contains a bluesy, jazz-like version of "Telegram Sam."

RECORD REVIEW

Whether or not you're a Bauhaus, or Love and Rockets, fan, you should check out this album. Even if you don't realize it, Bauhaus has made a tremendous impact on Brith pop music, and this album will attest to that.

However, if you are a Depeche Mode fan, you should think twice before buying Counterfeit, the debut album of former Depeche Mode frontman Martin Gore.

Okay, buy it if you have a tremendous appreciation for Gore's singing talent. Counterfeit has it and loads of it. But besides that and co-producing , Gore has nothing to do with this E.P.. Not one song or any lyric was written by him. Are you confused? I know I was. I suppose that, in itself it is no breech of musical talents, but it is a bit surprising after his dominant role in Depeche Mode as chief songwriter.

Don't consider this release to be Depeche Mode with Gore's name on it. Throughout Counterfeit, you are somewhat reminded of Gore's former band only because of the polish and clarity of the sound. But the music - that's a different story.

You somehow get the feeling that Gore wrote down six songs that he liked and decided he could sing them better. All the cuts on the E.P. are written by assorted (unknown) songwriters,notably Ron Mael of the Sparks. Undoubtedly the strongest song on Counterfeit is it's first single "Compulsion", written by Joe Crow (who?). "Compulsion" oozes with that easy techno-rhythm beat that reminds one, again, of Depeche Mode. This song is good, really good. Another outstanding cut "In a Manner of Speaking" has Gore singing at his best. The emotion and feeling of the lyrics is conveyed brilliantly in this melodic love song.

Turning to the second side, "Gone", though dramatic, is a boring song. As imaginative as Sparks is, Mael's song, "Never Turn Your Back on Mother Nature" is indelibly ho-hum and ends up coming off as a pre-school nursery rhyme. In the song "Motherless Child" Gore gets soulful and sounds as if he's been listening to too many Billy Holliday records. Granted Martin Gore is a soulful singer but he's definitely not a soul singer.

This is, technically speaking, very sophisticated music, almost too much so. And admittedly, Gore pulls it off because he can sing and does sing these songs particularly well. The problem is it's too polished and ends up seeming distant and cold overall.

One thing is certain.Counterfeit is assuredly not going to appeal to the typical 16 year old Depeche Mode fan. As for the rest of the world , that's a tough call. Gore is undisputedly a talented songwriter, as seen in his work as a part of Depeche Mode and here on this record. Yet somehow all the elements just don't come together for Counterfeit as a whole.

Tonight in the clubs, the Tony Trischka Band plays their brand of bluegrass at the Iron Horse in Northampton at 8:30 p.m. Admission is $6, and all ages may attend.

Downstairs from Pearl Street at Ten Below, the Boston-area band Scruffy the Cat, hot on the heels of their brilliant Moons of Jupiter album, will be playing an 18• show at 8:30 p.m. Admission is $8 for those under 21, and $6 for all others.

Berries Red, a one woman play directed by Hampshire College professor Rhonda Blair, is at the E Street Theater in Hadley at 8:00 p.m. Admission is $5 for senior citizens and children, and $8 for everyone else.

Shy Five will be at Sheehan's Cafe.

Also this evening, rock harmonica player, James Montgomery, who has perfomed with some of the all-time blues greats, will be at Twisters at 9:30 p.m. Admission is $7.

Tomorrow evening, the Iron Horse welcomes Chicago blues band Big Time Sarah for an 8:30 p.m. show, and Jerry Portnoy and the Streetliners (who at one time played with bluesman Muddy Waters), entertain at Ten Below at 8:30 p.m. Admission to both shows is $7.

Also tomorrow, the early eighties new wave band A Flock of Seagulls, who scored a minor hit with their bubblegum pop tune "I Ran", will be at Katina's.

Tomorrow (not tonight as we reported in Thursday's Collegian) at Twister's will be the WMUA/Twister's benefit blues bash with King Cod and the Blues Sharks and The Wildcat O'Halloran Band. The show starts at 9 p.m., and admission is $5. All proceeds go towards badly needed new equipment for WMUA. Hard rockers Eighth Route Army will be banging it out at Sheehan's Cafe.

At Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall tomorrow, Suzanne Barkham and the Almost Totally Unaccompanied Voices (who graduated from Bobby McFerrin's master class), perform, using only their voices and various body parts, at 8 p.m. Admission is $3 for children and senior citizens, and $7 for all others.

Saturday is also "college day" at the Three County Fair in Northampton. The fair includes exhibit halls, rides, rabbit and dog shows, horse racing, live entertainment, and plenty of food. It is open from 10 a.m.-11 p.m.

On Sunday the 10th, singer/songwriter Cheryl Wheeler will be performing in the Amherst College Frontroom at 8 p.m. Wheeler has been described as a cross between Joan Armatrading and Randy Newman. Admission to the show is $7.

Also on Sunday, the Iron Horse hosts another Nu Wave Cafe with the hard rocking band Fetchin' Bones. The show stars at 8:30 p.m., and admission is $8. All ages may attend.

Sunday at Ten Below, will be The Sports Section (You may also know them by the name Huey Lewis and the News.) at 7 p.m. Admisson is $20, but the show has been sold out for weeks. Good luck on your quest for tickets.

From 12-4:30 p.m. on Sunday will be Hillel's Back From the Beach to the Pond. The event includes food, music, and games, and admission is free.

There is also a rumor that UPC has booked Robyn Hitchcock, sans the Egyptians, for a September date in the UMass Fine Arts Center for some time in September. Stay tuned for more details.

Weekend sports preview listing

Sports also goes into full swing for the University of Massachusetts this weekend and fans will have a lot to choose from.

This weekend the UMass football team, minus graduated quarterback Dave Palazzi and running back Kevin Schmellie, plays James Madison on Saturday September 9th. at the Alumni Field at 1:30 p.m. This should be a real test for Coach Reid and the boys as Madison is the slight favorite.

The women's UMass volleyball team plays Hartford at 1 p.m. in Totman Gym, while the men's soccer team heads up north and challenges Maine.

In field hockey, UMass takes on Syracuse on neutral ground in Springfield at 2 p.m., and the nationally ranked and undersupported women's soccer team takes on Virginia at noon at Boyden Field. Head on down and cheer for the Minutewomen.

Nu Wave Cafe keeps Title with Bones

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

By now, everybody has heard of Suzanne Vega and 10,000 Maniacs. The acts sell-out huge arenas as fans scramble for tickets. But just three short years ago, people had a chance to view these, then up and coming, acts in the intimate confines of the Iron Horse in Northampton.

These acts were part of the Nu Wave Cafe that the Horse originated in 1986. The club continues the tradition with the hard-hitting Fetchin' Bones this Sunday night, and all ages may attend.

PREVIEW

Iron Horse assistant manager Jonathan Smith explained what kind of bands the club looks for to play the Nu Wave. "The bands are cutting edge, typically left of center, not necessarily new wave, but bands that approach music in a new way. We want the bands that stick out, and they're usually new bands," he said.

Iron Horse owner Jordi Herold explained how the Nu Wave Cafe originated. "We've showcased many different types of music in our eleven years," he said. "But we never did anything in the rock idiom. But if we're going to play music across the board, we have to include the rock bands with something to say."

Although Fetchin' Bones may not be one of the politically active bands Herold had in mind when he originated the Nu Wave Cafe, they are certainly an up and coming band that approaches music in a unique and vibrant style. Their latest album, Monster, is full of hard-driving, powerful songs that make you feel as if you've just experienced a day of add/drop lines, except it's a good kind of exhaustion. Unfortunately, their sound does not warrant much airplay, even on the now more conservative alternative stations.

Songs like "Love Crushing" and "Mr. Bad" display the band's humor and expertise in banging out a crunching guitar riff. And all the songs on the album contain some aspect of life that we've all been through. A perfect example is "Spot", which the band describes as a song "about waking up and knowing you're going to get into trouble that day."

But no matter how loud and wild the band is on vinyl, it's peanuts compared to their live shows. This band must truly be seen to be believed.

If the Iron Horse is still standing after the Fetchin' Bones show, the club plans to bring in other diverse acts as part of their Nu Wave Cafe. These include Brave Combo (often called the Pogues of polka), on September 25, and Gordon Gano's (of Violent Femmes) gospel band, Mercy Seat, on October 1. So if you're sick and tired of listening to people talk about REM when they talk about alternative, the Nu Wave Cafe may be for you.

Malle's intelligent and sensitive Murmur of the Heart comes of age

ANDRE BUSI
Collegian Correspondent

Do you hate movie critics? Do you feel insulted when some boring reviewer throws you tidbits of insider gossip and pretentious clutter? Are you embarrassed by critics who wax poetic in a desperate attempt to keep your attention?

If so, then I don't know what I'm going to write about Murmur of the Heart. I like the film, but it's French, which means reading subtitles and looking at foreigners. And it was made during the seventies, which means things like ambiguity and scenes where nobody says anything.

FILM REVIEW

The movie is about a teenage boy growing up in France during the fifties. I hope that doesn't scare anyone off, because this happens to be one of the few "slice o' life" films that actually works. Why does it work? It's intelligently and sensitively written, and directed by Louis Malle.

The movie's also got booze and sex and some really cool numbers by Charlie Parker on the soundtrack. This isn't about some wide-eyed child dawdling through his slightly wacky and charming world, but rather it's about a cigar-chomping 14 year old thief in whose hands all women are putty, and who reads Camus just to piss-off his teacher. Benoit Ferreux seems every bit as awkward and lovable as the pint-sized misanthrope he portrays, authentically capturing the frustrations of puberty.

Louis Malle also directed Au Revoir Les Enfants, so it's a good bet anyone who enjoyed that will get into this as well. However, you don't have to be an afficianado of European cinema to appreciate this. I'm an MTV baby, and like almost everyone, I'm used to movies with sound bytes, split second shots, and $40 million set designs (especially in flaccid sequels and superhero adaptations), but this sophisticated Frenchie stuff from 1971 isn't so bad.

Murmur of the Heart is playing until the Monday the 11th at the Academy of Music in Northampton with two shows at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m.

Violence continues amidst elections

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government held a general election yesterday that measured white attitudes toward apartheid and a proposal by the governing party to share limited power with blacks.

Hundreds of thousands of disenfranchised blacks staged a general strike that capped a nationwide protest of the parliamentary election.

Government officials said the vote was the most crucial since the governing National Party came to power on promises of strict race segregation in 1948.

More than 90 percent of black workers stayed home in major cities, according to employer organizations and transportation companies.

Most black schools and many attended by Indian and mixed-race students were closed, along with most businesses in the black townships.

Police used tear gas and whips to disperse mixed-race protesters who marched in the mixed-race township of Reiger Park near Boksburg, east of Johannesburg. Many demonstrators were children. Police arrested two men.

Before they attacked, police escorted television crews away from the demonstration, banned along with any other election defiance gatherings.

Police arrested 13 anti-election protesters at a voting station in the port city of Durban, and dispersed 30 mixed-race protesters at a polling booth near Cape Town, arresting a television crew filming the scene.

Train service into Cape Town was delayed by damage from an early morning explosion on the track, the South African Transport Service said. No injuries were reported.

Acting President F.W. de Klerk smiled, shook hands and enjoyed a champagne breakfast at his Pretoria-area polling booth. His long-governing National Party was expected to lose up to 30 of its 13 parliamentary seats, mostly to the Conservative Party which favors strict race discrimination.

Nevertheless, the Nationalists were expected to retain a majority in Parliament's dominant white chamber after promoting a plan to begin sharing some power with the country's 8 million blacks.

The government said 3,170,667 whites were eligible to vote. Turnout was reported sluggish because of freezing temperatures and biting winds early yesterday, but lines formed at polling places after noon, government radio said.

Whites voted for members of the white House of Assembly. More than 665,000 Indians and 1.7 million people of mixed race were eligible to vote for separate Parliament chambers with little power. Blacks have no vote.

The polls opened at 7 a.m. and were to close at 9 p.m. Final election results were not expected until today.

Police armed with handguns were stationed at most polling booths. Major black townships around Durban, Cape Town, Pretoria, Johannesburg and eastern Cape cities were quiet.

Virtually no taxi-vans were operating, and buses and trains to the cities were 70 percent to 100 percent empty.

"The stay-away is quite obviously very, very substantial," said Vincent Brett, a spokesman for the Associated Chambers of Commerce.

"Biting temperatures probably had an influence on workers' decisions to stay home," said the independent South African Press Association.

Three honored with Yankee Quill Award

BOSTON (AP) — Two newspaper editors and a journalism professor are this year's recipients of the Yankee Quill Award for outstanding contributions to journalism, it was announced yesterday.

The award, given annually by the New England Chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists, was awarded this year to Irving Kravsow, retired associate editor of The Hartford Courant; James V. Wyman, vice president and executive editor of The Providence Journal-Bulletin; and Caryl Rivers, a professor of journalism at Boston University.

Wyman joined the Journal-Bulletin in 1951 as a state staff reporter and has held a succession of editing assignments, including city editor, executive news editor and deputy executive editor of the Bulletin.

Kravsow, an award-winning reporter and columnist, devoted much of his career to recruiting minority journalists. He served as chief minority recruiter for the Courant and was a member of the Los Angeles Times Mirror's minority training program.

Rivers, a former reporter and editor, has been a professor of journalism and communications at BU since 1972.

She is an award-winning columnist and author. She also has appeared as a regular guest commentator on Boston radio and television stations.

All three journalists will be honored October 24 at the Yankee Quill Awards banquet in Boston. Bill Kovach, former editor of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution and current curator of Harvard University's Niemen Foundation, will deliver the keynote address.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Enjoy a happy, relaxed day with your family. Postpone time-consuming chores. A sermon holds significance for those trying to solve a personal problem. Your mate is supportive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Opt for a change of scenery today by getting out of town. Visit friends or family. A special dinner reminds you of your childhood. Resolve to host a reunion in the near future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The emphasis today is on burying the hatchet and reaching agreements. Meet people halfway. A search for truth will turn up surprising ideas or attitudes. Use your powers of persuation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Do not let someone's sharp tongue goad you into slashing out. Ignore little slights; remember that anger can be turned away by a silken answer. Protect your good name. Romance is unpredictable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Contact with people from different cultures is favored. You should be able to communicate your ideas effectively. Information on an unusual subject fascinates your audience. Make overdue phone calls.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are the lucky recipient of an older person's benevolence. Accept a gift or reward with gratitude and dignity. Pursue your goals with enthusiasm. A younger person follows your example.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The early bird gets the choice reward. A compelling personal quest could make this a day to remember. Discussion groups can provide some creative ideas. Relax at home with your family tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sharing a spiritual experience with your offspring is inspiring. Answer questions put to you by small fry. Keep the tradition of "family Sundays" strong. Candor clears up confusion.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you get off on the wrong foot, quickly reverse course. Ask probing but polite questions. The familiar way may not be the most practical. Put romance on hold for a while.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A great day for talking with loved ones. Family members get your drift without your having to spell everything out. You are able to straighten out a knotty domestic problem with relative ease.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Welcome a lull in your busy week. Being part of a close circle of friends feels great. Share easy cooking chores with small fry. They will enjoy taking part in the activities.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Social amenities, artistic expression and friendly cooperation are featured. Capitalize on the good will you feel! You enjoy getting together with old friends. Take part in church activities

During the one-week visit, Gioiosa went to wrestling matches with Mrs. Rose and went to the race track with Rose, he said.

"I felt so special. I wished people back home could see me with Pete Rose," Gioiosa said.

His voice cracked as he remembered what happened when he got ready to return to New Bedford after the holiday.

"Pete says, 'Where are you going?' I said, 'back home.' He said, 'You're staying,' Gioiosa said.

The Dukes will feature receivers Keith Thornton and Leon Taylor, who as freshmen dismantled UMass in the game two years ago. Fullback Greg Medley rushed for 123 yards and two touchdowns last week. Other players to watch include linebacker Steve Bates and free safety Eupton Jackson, who were both Division I-AA All-Americans last season.

One thing in JMU's favor is that the first-game jitters are gone. But despite all the accolades, JMU coach Joe Purzycki isn't ready to believe that his team is invincible yet.

"If depth and experience count for anything, we have a chance to be a pretty good football team," Purzycki said. "This team seems to be as deep as any team we've had in five years, but we have to come together and gel as a team."

Purzycki also said that his team will have to work hard to improve over last year's disappointing 5-6 record after going 9-2 in '87 and making the I-AA playoffs. He also believes that UMass will be a much tougher test for his team than Bloomsburg State.

(UMass) has a top-level I-AA program and we'll have to improve a great deal this week in order to win," Purzycki said.

So either way it will be a battle, both coaches agree.

"We're going to have to kick and scratch and fight real hard to win this one," Reid said.

Starting in the midfield will be April Kater (last year's co- scoring champion with 20 points), Kim Montgomery, Robin Runstein, and freshman Lori Mickelson. The Minutewomen will have two proven scorers in Michelle Woodside (third in scoring with 17 points) and Sue Gaudette, who knocked in three game-winners last year.

Unlike previous years, Rudy plans to substitute more, particularly early on. He has the luxury of a talented bench, with goalgetters like Kim Eynard, Lee Anne Swartz, Colette Bowler, and Tracy Arwood. Rudy said, "They give us bench strength and tactical capability.

Friend of Rose cries out

CINCINNATI(AP)—Thomas Gioiosa's voice cracked Thursday as he described how Pete Rose treated him like a son — getting him a job, a college scholarship, a major-league tryout and items he could never afford.

Gioiosa, on trial on cocaine and tax evasion charges, told a U.S. District Court jury that he lived with the former Cincinnati Reds' manager for about five years, starting in late 1979.

"I felt like part of the family," he said.

Gioiosa's connection with Rose underlies one of the charges in his trial — that he deceived the IRS by claiming Rose's racetrack earnings on his taxes. Gioiosa, 31, of New Bedford, Mass., also is accused of participating in a cocaine ring in the mid-1980s, after he moved out of Rose's home.

He could be sentenced to up to 28 years in jail and fined up to $2 million if convicted on all charges.

Rose isn't charged with any crimes, but a federal grand jury in Cincinnati is looking into whether he claimed all his income from gambling, memorabilia sales and autograph appearances on his taxes. Rose was banned for life from baseball on Aug. 24 over gambling allegations.

Gioiosa refused to cooperate with baseball's investigation of Rose that led up to the lifetime ban. His decision to testify in his own behalf Thursday left him open to cross-examination by government prosecutors later in the trial.

He began his testimony with a 40-minute recounting of his childhood as a baseball star in New Bedford and the way his life changed after he met Rose.

Gioiosa said he was in Tampa, Fla., where the Reds held spring training, in 1978 when he met Rose's son, Pete Jr., at the hotel pool. He became friends with the boy, and that led to an introduction to Rose.

"I shook his hand and was in awe, because I always wanted to play like Pete Rose," Gioiosa said. 'He said, "If you work hard you'll be in the big leagues some day.' That gave me a lot of inspiration."

Gioiosa kept in touch with Pete Jr. and Rose's first wife, Karolyn, by telephone, and met them again in spring training of 1979. Mrs. Rose invited him to join the family in Cincinnati for Christmas that year, he said.

The jetlag is from the long flight to the United States, that Scott took from her home country of Trinidad. Scott also has some company from her native land with Sherlan Cabralis. They also may accompany each other in the starting lineup the way things are going.

"Sherlan has just fit in great," Hixon said. "She will be a real asset to our team and will probably end up either in the midfield or on the forward-line somewhere. I think her experience really gives us a little bit of a lift"

There is a difference between the two Trinidadians though.

"She (Cabralis) is not really a turf player," Hixon said. "So we'll have to see how she does the next couple of days on turf and I'm sure she'll be fine."

But why play the home opener on turf at Springfield when UMass' home field is of natural grass? Well, there is one very good reason.

"Considering we have Old Dominion and James Madison next week on turf, I thought that it was kind of a good build-up."

By that time next week, Hixon may have a starting lineup.

It's kickoff time for Minutemen!

UMass opens tomorrow at Warren McGuirk

UMass head coach Jim Reid will prowl the sidelines for the first time this year when UMass plays James Madison tomorrow.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. all of the questions and preseason hype of the University of Massachusetts football team will be answered.

The Minutemen kick off their 1989 season with a non-league clash against James Madison University at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. And although it is not a Yankee Conference battle, it's sure to rank right up there with the toughest games UMass will play this season.

"This is too tough of a test," said UMass coach Jim Reid. "The conference is so tough, and when you pick up teams like James Madison and Lehigh and Northeastern, all you do is give yourself the opportunity to get banged up for the conference games."

Not that the Minutemen aren't banged up already. Three projected starters will miss tomorrow's game with injuries, including defensive tackle Mark Pompi (hamstring), guard Paul Connor (herniated disc, out for season) and tailback Steve Olson (torn stomach muscles). Also, linebacker Drew Comeau and defensive tackle Steve Brothers are ailing but will give it a shot.

What has resulted is a bit of lineup juggling, with All-New England cornerback Jerome Bledsoe being shifted to tailback to replace Olson. Bledsoe impressed in preseason scrimmages, but won't start until he learns the system.

"We were going to give him a try anyway, because he has the speed and he's shown it on punt returns," Reid said. "But he still hasn't picked up the total offense." Allen Williams, a backup last season, will get the nod.

As far as quarterback is concerned, it will be Roger Baldacci. The fifth-year senior was one of four quarterbacks battling for the job in the preseason.

"Roger's the quarterback and we hope he can run the show," Reid said. "Tom Fasano will run the goal line, because he's a winner and he gets the job done."

Both quarterbacks can also run the option, which will be consistent with the Minutemen's offensive scheme of the past few years. Baldacci also has a strong arm and good size.

This will be the third time UMass has faced the Dukes, with each winning one game. In the season opener in 1986, Silvio Bonvini nailed a field goal with four seconds left to give the Minutemen a 16-14 win. Then in 1987, JMU stuffed the Minutemen to take a 21-15 win at the Stadium.

"We weren't in it at all," Reid recalled. "We never should have scored either. They just ravaged us."

Reid expects the same kind of tough defense tomorrow. The Dukes opened their season last week against Division II Bloomsburg State, picking up an easy 48-3 win. Reid was impressed with the performance of the Dukes.

"They did a good job with Bloomsburg," Reid said. "They have excellent team speed and a great defense, which was ranked eighth or ninth in the country last year."

JMU runs out of the Delaware Wing-T and the I-formation, although it will throw the ball.

"They're basically a running team, but one quarterback (Roger Waters) has a great throwing arm and the other, Eriq Williams, is the guy who they will use to run the ball," Reid said.

Soccer heads to Maine

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Correspondent

As the roster for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team is completed, the decision about the starting goalkeeper is finalized. Sophomore Jon Gruber has won the starting position for this weekend's game. Other starters have been confirmed and this team looks to be the strongest yet.

Despite the loss of the University of Maine's top two players, the Black Bears' roster and field play look the same as last year. The Minutemen's objective at Orono, Me. this Saturday will be to impose their style of play onto Maine.

"We want to outwork them, pressure them to play our game," said coach Jeff Gettler, who scouted Maine's preseason. Maine's preseason games consisted of a 2-1 loss to Drexel University and a 2-1 win over Lafayette College. The types of play implemented in those two games were very different from one another, so the Minutemen's strategy is not in black and white but Gettler said: "Our success will be in imposing ourselves upon them - physically, technically and tactically."

The Minutemen have not lost to the Black Bears in four years. "They have always been close, tough games," Gettler said. "They are a well-coached team."

The Black Bear's strongest players look to be freshman center-forward Jason Charles and sophomore center-midfielder Todd Sniper, who will be "matched up by our better and veteran players," said Gettler.

Those players include sophomore back Dan Lawrence to deter Charles and junior midfielder Peter McEvoy to cover Sniper. Other starting defensemen include senior backs Tom Skiba and Gael Sullivan, as well as sophomore back Darren Stone. Rounding out the defense are senior Bill Kousmanidis and sophomore Brett Anthony as midfielders. "This is a very focused and driven group," Gettler said.

As in almost any sport, an awesome defense generates a fantastic offense. "Our attack is better than ever," said Gettler. Leading the attack pack this season are senior Steve Cesnek, junior Carl Hanks and sophomore Ray Cunha.

"It's hardest to build up the creative play," Gettler said. According to him, the difficult part is over. "Our level of fitness is high," Gettler said. "Injuries are not a factor."

The Minutemen's biggest challenge for this game will be to "finish up our scoring chances," according to Gettler, which at this time seems to be their only weakness.

Doubleheader weekend for UMass

Nationally-ranked UMass takes on Virginia

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

Head coach Jim Rudy still has some questions about his Minutewomen soccer team going into its first two games, but he hopes that his team can emerge from the doubleheader weekend with some answers and a spotless 2-0 record.

"Right now we're rounding into shape," Rudy said. "My question is: are we ready to play at Division I-A level speed?"

He feels that Virginia (Saturday, 12:15 p.m., at Boyden Hill) and Colgate (Sunday, 2:15 p.m., at the Hill) can give him a better indication of where his team stands, instead of relying on the Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America (ISAA)'s preseason ranking of No. 6. That's not exactly a shabby rank, but Rudy explains that the poll is simply based on last year's postseason results.

"Virginia will tell us where we are and if we are a top 10 team," said Rudy. "If not, it will identify the things we have to do to get there. Colgate will test our match fitness with playing two weekend games."

The University of Virginia (1-1) will enter Saturday's match emotionally charged off of a tough but encouraging loss to second-ranked North Carolina State. The Cavaliers were slow getting out the gates, getting beaten twice in the first 30 minutes, but dominated in the last 60 minutes. During that span, Virginia outshot the Wolfpack 18-7 and was a victim of the bad bounces, missing an open net and hitting the crossbar.

UVa coach Laurie Gregg said of the loss, "The N.C. State game was frustrating because we dominated the majority of the game. This is the best we've played against them and the two defensive errors cost us the game."

Gregg had this to say about the Minutewomen: "Massachusetts is a traditional top four team and will be a tough game like N.C. State was."

Key players for 11th-ranked Virginia include Tracy D'Amellio and Andrea Rubio up front, senior Gayle Smith and freshman Vicky Siderenko in the midfield, and Andrea Cromwell and Liz Gold at defense.

Colgate University sports a 2-0 record with back-to-back 3-0 victories over Canisius and LeMoyne. Junior Sara Krasnoo and sophomore Carrie Webster have combined to score four of the team's six goals. Goaltender Carolyn Chambers (1.18 GAA last year) has two shutouts this season and has two strong defenders in front of her in senior co-captain Susan McRae and Paige Peeples, the team's defensive MVP last year as a freshman.

Coach Rudy has not decided on a No. 1 goalkeeper and will start senior Mary Curtis against Virginia and freshman Skye Eddy against Colgate. Rudy said, "We'll try to get a look at both of them. Both are going to get real game time and we'll see how the chips fall."

The defense is solid with Holly Hellmuth, Margie Jaede, Sarah Szetela, and Becky Bonzano. According to Rudy, the quartet will start off with a matching up then to the level, ability, and system of the opponents, then adjusting if necessary.

Minutewomen battle Syracuse at Springfield

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The season is all ready to get under way for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team. Tomorrow is the season opener.

The Minutewomen will play Syracuse University over at Springfield College at 2 p.m. Still though, after three weeks of practice, UMass coach Pam Hixon has not come up with a starting lineup.

"I don't know what our starting lineup is going to be in any way, shape, or form," Hixon said. "I really will have no idea until probably after practice tomorrow night."

There is many a job to be won. Nobody is out of the question. Just look at last year's NCAA playoff game, which the Minutewomen dropped to Northeastern University, 2-1, at Totman Field.

In that game, Kathy DeAngelis, who had been the team's leading scorer for the past two years, and had been a starter all season, was benched in favor of Elise McDevitt. The reason for the change, Hixon reasoned, was a faster lineup to combat the Huskies.

The change really was no big deal to the UMass coach though, because she has confidence in all her forwards. It simply comes down to choosing the right ammunition to load for the showdown.

Kim Hannigan? Mara Fratassio? Leigh Hallam? DeAngelis? Dawn Trumbauer? All of them are capable forwards, who have proved that they can put the ball in the net. But which ones will play?

"What our best combinations are, offensive and the defensive corners, what our best groups are in terms of working together, that'll probably be our starting lineup," Hixon said.

And somebody is going to have to play goal. The contest for that slot will be between sophomore Lisa Charron and freshman Phillipa Scott. Neither has ever logged a single minute for the Minutewomen in a regular or post season game. But at least one of them, if not both of them, will be thrown into the heat of competition for lots and lots of minutes this year.

"The goalies are going to be getting a lot of work (yesterday and today in practice) so we can decide who's who," Hixon said.

Practice today will be at Springfield, for one very big reason. The surface that the Minutewomen will be playing Syracuse on tomorrow will be artificial turf. Which is something that UMass does not have on its campus. And is something that may give Scott an edge over Charron, at least for the time being.

"Scotty is recovering from jetlag so she is becoming more outgoing and a little more into it," Hixon said. "And turf is probably her specialty."

UMass takes steps to cope with cuts

Administration will sacrifice size for quality

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Claiming a spiraling budget will reduce the size, not the quality of the University of Massachusetts, Provost Richard O'Brien said administrators are planning a steady reduction of faculty and students in upcoming years.

O'Brien said the University suffered a severe but balanced cutback this fall, citing the simultaneous reduction of 30 faculty members and the enrollment of 800 fewer students this term.

Next semester, between 600 and 800 fewer students will be admitted, he said.

"The student-faculty ratio will remain about the same," O'Brien said. "We are bringing in virtually no new students in the spring."

In July, Governor Michael Dukakis vetoed $8.1 million from the UMass budget which was originally appropriated for fiscal year 1990, leaving the University's budget with a shortfall of $23.5 million since the cuts began two years ago.

As a result, the administration was forced to cut classes, teaching assistants, library acquistions, support staff and faculty, O'Brien said.

Nearly 1,000 class sections were also eliminated from the fall schedule but O'Brien said University administrators are considering revising the General Education requirements to alleviate the loss.

"If worse comes to worse, and students could not graduate because there weren't enough classes, we would waive General Education requirements," he said.

"In the short run, the University is very seriously affected by the cuts. The reason why we can tolerate it is by downsizing," O'Brien said.

"There's no correlation, as you look around the country, between size and quality," he said. "In principle, there's no reason we shouldn't go from a university this size to one that's 80-percent of this size and resume quality."

Student's death mourned

By PETER LEON
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student died Friday from injuries suffered in a hit and run accident earlier in the week.

Freya Batlle was struck by a car while a home in Puerto Rico. She suffered severe internal injuries. She was in a coma for three days before dying of a blood clot in her lung.

Witnesses reported that four young people were in the car, but as of now, no arrests have been made.

Batlle was about to start her final semester at UMass as a communications major. She was involved in various activities at the University, working as an usher at the Fine Arts Center, an aid at the Crafts Shop in the Student Union and as a member of the Collegian's night graphics crew.

Friends expressed their horror and dismay at the accident. Nancy Cohen, Batlle's former roommate, said, "Freya was loved by everyone."

"She was fun and energetic, and made it clear that her family and friends were always her first concern in her life," Cohen said. "She was so young that it doesn't seem fair that her life has ended."

Memorial services for Batlle will be held at the Newman Center Tuesday evening at 5 p.m.

The Collegian wishes to express its sincerest sympathies and and regrets to Batlle's family and friends.

Reagan undergoes brain operation; recovering nicely after surgery

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — Recovering rapidly from surgery to remove fluid from the surface of the brain, former President Ronald Reagan on Saturday joked with visitors and read several newspapers, his spokesman said.

"He is in excellent spirits, telling baseball stories and joking with his staff," Reagan's spokesman Mark Weinberg said.

In reference to the removal of at least some of his hair for the surgery, Reagan quipped, "I guess my barber can have the week off," Weinberg said.

Shortly after awaking at 6:30 a.m. Saturday, Reagan underwent a follow-up CAT scan to view the upper right portion of his head where surgeons on Friday drilled a hole in his skull to remove a buildup of blood. Weinberg said the problem stemmed from a July 4 incident in which Reagan fell from a "wildly" bucking horse. It was detected on a routine physical examination.

The "evacuation" of the puddle of blood had progressed "exactly as had been anticipated" as of Saturday morning and doctors removed the drain that had been placed on his skull at the time of the surgery, Weinberg said.

Friday's hour-long operation was led by Dr. Thoralf M. Sundt, chairman of the Mayo Clinic's department of neurologic surgery. Sundt, editor of a leading medical journal on neurology, was assisted by two neurologic surgeons, three nurses and an anesthesiologist at the clinic, located about 70 miles southeast of Minneapolis.

Reagan's postoperative recovery room is located in an otherwise unoccupied section of St. Mary's Hospital which was under security guard. Nancy Reagan spent the night in a room across the hall from her husband and will remain at the hospital "at least for the time being," Weinberg said.

He would not say when Reagan is expected to be released and Sundt would not comment about any aspect of Reagan's care.

White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk said President Bush called Reagan about 6 p.m. EDT and the call lasted about five minutes.

"The president wished him well," said Popaiuk, "President Reagan sounded strong and very well. He said he had no pain. He stated that he hopes to get out soon and expressed his appreciation for the flowers the president and Mrs. Bush had sent."

Grad Senate offers money for child care

By LINDA ROSSI
Collegian Correspondent

The Graduate Student Senate child care voucher program will provide $11,000 in child care assistance starting next year to University of Massachustts graduate students with children under age five, GSS Chairman Kevin Dodson said.

The program, which is operated solely by the GSS, is financed by a mandatory fee graduate students pay each semester, he said. Students may receive up to $75 a month for regulated child care, he said.

"It's only a band-aid," Dodson said, claiming the aid is minimal in comparison to escalating fees for day care in the state.

But, he added, "It's better than nothing." He said the program is one of the few on campus which remains unaffected by state budget cuts.

Now in its third year, the program was started in response to the lack of child care on campus and the high cost of off-campus child care, said Jonathan Frank, one of the program's initiators.

World Renown UMass Biologist to lecture at Hampshire College

Biologist Lynn Margulis, a UMass professor, will deliver a lecture on The Gaia Hypothesis at 7 p.m. in the Main Lecture Hall in the Franklin Patterson Building at Hampshire College.

The talk includes a slide show and is free and open to the public.

The Gaia Hypothesis is a complicated scientific theory named for the ancient Greek mother earth goddess. The theory says the conditions on earth necessary to sustain life are maintained by life itself.

The event kicks off Hampshire College's fall colloquy on environmental issues. The colloquy will run from Sept. 11 to Sept. 28.

Activists gather at Hampshire

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Fueled by the rumblings of a national student movement, more than 30 college and university students gathered this weekend at Hampshire College to heighten awareness of issues and join forces in planning a "day of action."

The two-day event was organized by Hampshire College student Randy Viscio, a member of the People for a Socially Responsible University (PSRU).

PSRU is a student organization which received national attention last spring when area students launched six separate building takeovers at the University of Massachusetts to protest Department of Defense financed research at the school.

Students, who came from six colleges and universities ranging from the University of Arizona to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, joined local authors and organizations to discuss individual concerns and form a grassroots network of student activists.

The issues ranged from budget cutbacks to environmental concerns and focused largely on tactics and research used by the PSRU last spring in an effort to halt military-financed research.

Viscio focused on setting a uniform "day of action" for students across the country to develop their own strategies when negotiations with schools' administrators have broken down.

The group would not release a formal date, but said they will take some form of student action in October.

At UMass, Viscio said PSRU members will circulate posters over the next two months to invite students, faculty and administrators, "but not [Chancellor Joseph] Duffey," to discuss economic conversion from military to civilian financed research.

In this case, economic conversion entails phasing out research which is financed by the Defense Department and replacing it with funding from a non-governmental source, such as the National Science Foundation, Viscio said.

The PSRU is also holding meetings to recruit new members opposite the UMass Student Government Association, challenging the undergraduate student senate's weekly Wednesday night meeting.

"We didn't create the issue, but we exposed it," Viscio said. "A wise man once said: If the minority is right, then the majority ought to be doing what the minority is."

Should these efforts to educate the public and implement a strategy to phase out military funding fail, Viscio said "direct action" will be taken. He refused to speculate on what form of action this will be.

"We won't let up in what we're doing in terms of protests until this is done," he said. "If the administraton is going to discuss what we want and how to go about doing it, then there's going to be no problem."

At the end of last spring, an ad-hoc committee was established to discuss current research issues, but Viscio said this committee has no binding power to implement strategy for conversion.

"What's the sense of looking into [the issues] if your goal is not to implement them?" he asked. "This is death research. We want to see it stop because we don't want to see people dying."

However, if the state forces the UMass to sustain further cutbacks, O'Brien said the University's reputation as a first-rate public higher education system will quickly erode.

"If we can keep our untenured faculty here, in ten years' time, we are going to be one of the best public institutions in the nation," he said.

But, O'Brien said, the attitude of state legislators toward public higher education is "cut, cut, cut." He said these psychological factors can drive new faculty to other universities.

O'Brien urged students to write letters to their legislators and tell them that the state is damaging a place that is key to their life.

"This has got to be maintained as a quality place, if not you're going to have easy access to a crummy education," he said.

He said it is possible that next semester, the state may ask UMass to return funds already appropriated for 1990.

"It doesn't look good," he said. "It would be madness to cut deeper into the institution.

"If there is a reversion, my belief is don't do the simple thing and terminate non-tenured faculty," he said. "We should discard whole departments; take whole areas and do away with them."

> "This has got to be maintained as a quality place, if not, you're going to have easy access to a crummy education."

Diverse students unify

They overcame distance for common interests

They came from as far as Arizona, and as near as Boston and New Jersey.

Students with educational diversities ranging from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, which is hailed as a flagship school in public education, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, one of the world's top private schools.

But the small crowd of 31 students who assembled this weekend under the dim light of a red barn at Hampshire College attempted to transcend these differences and focus on a higher goal: a "national student movement."

The two-day conference, which discussed nationwide communication and plans for a "day of action," included students from the University of Arizona, Rutgers University in New Jersey, UMass-Boston, UMass-Amherst, MIT, and Hampshire College.

Students compared experiences in fighting for various causes, ranging from saving a mountain in Arizona to fighting tuition and fee hikes at Rutgers and UMass-Boston.

Dan Sedon, a Rutgers senior, said the conference is the beginning of a unified student voice advocating for common goals across the country, like "ending racism and intervention overseas."

"It's happening," he said of the student movement. "It's going to start coming together."

Corey Samuels, a University of Arizona junior, said her trip was funded by a student organization that is concerned with budgets for off-campus housing and environmental issues.

"We wanted to be in on the networking and to build closer ties with the students here out east," she said. "Now we can work on a more national level."

■ child care

"Obviously, the University hadn't made a commitment to child care and the GSS felt that something needed to be done," Frank said.

Of the approximately 4,000 graduate students currently attending the University, 32 received assistance last year, Dodson said.

The criteria for distributing aid is determined by the person's financial need based on total taxable family income, family size and other forms of child care and benefits received, he said.

Families who are already enrolled in child care programs on campus are not eligible to apply, Dodson said.

Students receiving aid generally earn less than $10,000 a year, Dodson said. However, students whose annual earnings total $20,000 or less are welcome to apply, he added.

Income guidelines are based on reports published by the state Department of Social Services, he said.

Dodson said the program offers aid on a sliding-scale basis for both full and part-time child care.

Families in need of care 20 hours per week and under may receive $25, $30 or $35 in aid per month while those in need of 21 hours per week and over will receive monthly stipends of $50, $60 or $75, he said.

In order to receive aid, parents must enroll their children in state-licensed child care centers or licensed private home providers, Dodson said.

Because many needy families currently rely on babysitters who are unlicensed, such as family members or friends, parents are allowed ten working days from the date of notification to secure licensed day care, he said.

Applications are now available at GSS, located at 919 Campus Center. The application deadline is Sept. 15, 1989.

Besides the GSS program, two other day care programs exist on campus: the University Child Care program, and a fund to assist undergraduate students with day care, Dodson said.

The University Child Care program is an administrative unit financed by state funds. The latter program, which is financed by an optional fee, provides assistance only to undergraduates.

UMass student falls from frat house; listed as stable

University of Massachusetts student Jay Mortenson, 20, 418 North Pleasant St., fell from his second-floor room of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house early Friday, according to officials from the Amherst Fire Department.

The fire department responded to a 3:30 a.m. call after Mortenson was found unconscious by his housemates, according to the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Police said Mortenson woke up during the night and leaned out the window too far, causing the fall, the Gazette reported.

Mortenson suffered cuts to his head and arm. As of Friday, he was listed in stable condition at University Health Services.

Health Services staff on duty yesterday refused to issue any information to update his condition.

True embryonic delusions

You can be sure these custody battlers fighting for their frozen eggs and sperm (a.k.a. embryos) haven't given a thought to the day after they bring their frozen fluid home.

If they did, they would realize that a custody victory would only create a larger dilemma for themselves and their offspring — storage.

Alise Harfield

Just where do they think they're going to keep the petri dish? Common sense suggests these parents wouldn't throw their just-won children into a day care program for the really underdeveloped, right? So why on earth would they want them in some hospital with student nurses hovering and shivering all over them? And why would they run the risk of mistaken identity? (I hear embryos look a lot alike in those early days.)

Makes sense that they should want to keep their hopeful implants in their own Frigidaire.

But even this, I've found after imaginative investigation, is quite a chilling problem — especially in crowded households where the embryos would have to sacrifice living in the same ice box as, say, tomorrow's lunchmeats and crinkle-cuts.

Here's what I mean.

Imagine, if you will, a "Felix Unger" type husband (these situations are at the pre-divorce settlement stage):

WIFE (pointing to a container in open freezer): What's THAT?

HUSBAND: Why, that's a box of Arm-n-Hammer Baking Soda. After you put that liver and onions you made for your mother in there, I decided to make breathing easier for the embryo. Ya know, clear the air for the little fella.

WIFE: First of all, you stole the box from the refrigerator. And second, you . . . feller! Whaddaya mean, feller? How do you know it's not a girl?! Chauvinist!

Or the overzealous, underachieving eight-year-old:

KID: Hey Maaa!! Dad said I could save my first snowball like Richie Cunningham did on Happy Days so I found this really neat plastic dish in the freezer and it was empty so I took off the cover and the snow fit right in and I didn't even make any messes!

Or, the occasional house-cleaner who doesn't do windows or much else for that matter. (We'll call her Stella. No real reason except convenience.)

STELLA (reading note left on table from WIFE, not necessarily but quite possibly the same one as above): "After you use half-a-can of Lysol to get rid of the brown ring in the toilet bowl, remove and defrost chicken. Also, start a gravy. Thanks, WIFE."

(Much later.)

STELLA: Well you said for me to make a gravy and when I finally found the chicken in that terribly overcrowded and, may I add, moldy freezer of yours I saw a dish of gravy already made so I took it out . . . I just assumed even you could have made a mistake . . . No, it had no color but your husband says your cooking never does, so . . . Yes, that's all he ever told me, honest ma'am . . . Maybe I should leave now . . .

See what I mean? I hope these frozen embryo potential care-takers know what they're up against.

"WE HAVE ANOTHER PROBLEM. . . . SHE WANTS THEIR FROZEN EMBRYOS, BUT HE WANTS THEIR REFRIGERATOR/FREEZER! . . ."

Electronic drug

It's here. The newest, brightest phenomenon. The trendiest way to spend an evening. A new Great American Pastime. It's the center of every social event. Every living room. Every life.

It's television. And you can't get away from it.

Pamela McCarthy

I'm not saying that I don't occasionally watch the boob tube. Once in a while it's a nice, brainless, lazy way to kill time. Once in a while, that is.

I don't know about you, but the idea of spending every single Friday night watching bad sit-coms, tear-jerking dramas, and sappy soap operas just doesn't appeal to me. Once in a while, yeah, it's fun to sit and watch a movie on the tube. Just as long as someone remembers to turn the thing off.

Maybe that's what bugs me. So many of us just won't turn it off. We sit and watch. We feel too lazy from doing nothing to actually turn the television set off. It's one thing to watch a T.V. show you like, it's quite another to keep the thing on for hours at a time.

Of course, everyone has an excuse. "There's nothing else to do", "I just want it on for noise" (Gotta love that one. Ever hear of a stereo?!), and "There's some good entertainment on T.V."

Sure there's nothing else to do. I might buy that if you live in a place that boasts of only a post office, a general store, and a gas station. But we don't.

There are clubs. There are concerts. There are plays. You can see a movie, but you have to get up and leave. You're forced to expend energy, and yes, you might even think about what you saw. What a concept.

Don't feel like doing much? Just hang out with some friends. Without television. It can be done. You may even do something strange and revolutionary. Talking, you know, something social. That beats gaping at the boob tube for hours on end, not saying anything to each other. I can do that at home.

I don't know. Maybe I'm just plain behind the times. Maybe I'm just being narrow-minded. Why, I'm positive there's something good about doing nothing but watching T.V.

Okay, uh . . . well, you don't have to worry about what you look like. No one's going to pay any attention to you. Parents don't have to worry about what their kids are doing. They aren't getting into fights, doing drugs, drinking, or doing those carnal types of things. They're doing nothing. That may be good in one way. But there is a downside to this. I don't know about you, but I'd start to worry if I had a lump for a kid.

Besides, who needs drugs? We have one in our living rooms. The electronic narcotic. Don't believe me? Read up on the studies that's been done on the effects of television on people. See how much time you spend behind the big glass box in your living room. Count how many friends arrange classes around their television schedule. I'd love to see George declare war on this.

Good entertainment? Oh, yeah. I can't contain myself when Dallas, Who's the Boss, and McGyver appears on the tube. Do pencil me in for that social event, pleeeeeze.

I'm not saying that T.V. is all bad. I'm certainly not above watching it once in a while. But we've got to have something better to do than gape and drool at the mindless tripe of a piece of furniture.

Adventures in "Assisted Learning"

Thousands of UMass students who enrolled in freshman chemistry and math courses have been required to "participate" in weekly computer-aided learning sessions that replace classroom discussion. Is the SAO really violating the Budget Act?

For some time, UMass has had a reputation — deserved or not — as a hot bed for racial unrest.

In the fall of 1988, the SGA Budgets Committee proposed its final draft, known as the S-1. Aside from allocating more money for groups such as the Third World Caucus, the Committee also allotted monies for an additional position within the Office of Third World Affairs (OTWA). The position was meant to aid the current director in generating grants for Third World projects and facilitating the office, making it accessible to interested students. Due to financial constraints in 1986, the position was temporarily terminated.

Until now, all other positions had been reinstated. Last year's committee thought it was the perfect time to reinstate this position. Unfortunately, this does not look like it is going to happen.

Over the summer the Student Activity Office, with apparent approval from the Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson, halted the search process for the Office Assistant (one which cost $12,000), and have refused to allow OTWA to fill it. Instead they have created a new administrative position (costing $24,000 in student trust fund money) in violation of the Budget Act passed unanimously by the Senate. The SAO reasons that they are overloaded with work for the RSO system. Who should be upset over this? Minority students and the student government should be angered at the SAO for violating the budget act for the third time in six months. Perhaps students should consider whether we should accept or allow our Student Government to accept attitudes and situations that are both illegal under our own rules and foster a negative racial tone.

A higher form of engineering and science requires a higher form of calculator.

The further you go in engineering math and other technical courses, the more you need a scientific calculator that speeds you through complex problems. With 254 powerful advanced scientific functions, the TI-68 from Texas Instruments is both a smart choice and an exceptional value.

The TI-68 easily solves up to five simultaneous equations with real or complex coefficients . . . evaluates 40 complex number functions . . . and allows polar and rectangular forms for entries and results.

A convenient last equation replay feature lets you check your answers without re-entering them. Formula programming provides up to 440 program steps for as many as 12 user-generated formulas. Perform operations in four number bases, one- and two-variable statistics, and Boolean logic operations. The polynomial root finder calculates real and complex roots of quadratic, cubic or quartic equations.

Only the TI-68 delivers so much functionality, value and ease in one compact, advanced scientific tool. For more information on the TI-68's features and functions, pick up a free copy of the TI-68 technical brochure at your bookstore.

Legendary bluesman talks

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

James Montgomery quietly reminisced about the band's first show on the road. "It was 1971," he said, that UMass professor John Clayton brought the band to UMass. "We played in some big gym and after the show we passed around a hat and made more money from the students than we were guaranteed in our contract," Montgomery said.

"The blues, for some reason, is such a great form of music, that when playing the harmonica for instance, the best thing that can happen is when things are going so well that the line between you and the crowd disappears. You get caught up in the moment and play things you never learned to play," Montgomery explained. "It happens to any musician, poet, or artist. That kind of feeling, that selfless rapture when the art plays you. It's almost like what Yeats called "automatic writing"'.

He said there is probably no college that the James Montgomery Band hasn't played at throughout their 20 years of touring. He likes it best "when we're playing and everybody feels great, when people are willing to let loose and enjoy themselves, that happens all over, but I would love to play UMass again."

On Friday night at Twister's in Amherst, it was clear that the James Montgomery Band was glad to be back in town. The band,including Paul Murphy, Steve Barbuto and Lenny Bradford, opened their show with an instrumental called "Don't Lose Your Cool"— a fine synthesis of guitar, bass, and drums. With this, the band warmed things up with some blues you could really feel.

After a half hour of the band warming and heating up the stage, James Montgomery jumped in and the foursome began to rock some serious blues as Montgomery announced, "It's great to be back here in Amherst, Massachusetts. It was 19 years ago that the James Montgomery Band played its first gig ever at UMass, and we are so glad to be back!" he burst into "Messin' With the Kid" with a shake to each side. Montgomery was all over the stage. With his strong arms he pressed the harmonica tightly to his lips, then stretched them out to grab a quick breath to speed up the sequence.

After playing an energetic cover of the Neville Brothers "Fiyo on the Bayou", Montgomery said "I know it's back to school time for a lot of you, but some of you may have missed out on spring break last year. We're gonna take you down to "Florida!" As "Florida" began, the band lifted their arms straight up and began to play while jumping around in circles, and within minutes had the audience dancing the same way. Clearly, this endlessly energied, raspy-voiced, hip-rocking, boot-tapping blues musician is hot. Definitely blues.

Montgomery grew up in Detroit listening to Muddy Waters, Paul Butterfield, and B.B. King, and said he learned to play harmonica at age 14 from James Cotton.

After moving to Boston in 1967, Montgomery received a Master's degree in English literature at Boston University, and stayed there to teach two semesters of freshman seminars. "At that time, I was splitting tuition costs with my dad, and playing harmonica was how I made my half," Montgomery said. He later took to the stages of the Orpheum Theater and the Boston Garden.

"Aerosmith opened shows for me, but that was in the old days," he said. "We opened for the J. Geils Band and were on the first two Springsteen tours." The band has also jammed with Mick Jagger on New Years's Eve 1984 in New York City, and has previously collaborated with artists such as Paul Shaffer and the Blues Brothers.

Currently, The James Montgomery Band is working with James and Alex Taylor, and is in the preproduction stage of their sixth album, which is not yet titled. If it's half as hot as his Twister's show, then it is sure to be tremendous.

One woman play captures emotions

By JOHN PATRICK MUSULIN
Collegian Correspondent

Berries Red is a fascinating experience. It is "real life" shot straight from the heart, that will flirt with your emotions and echo down the forgotten corridors of your mind.

REVIEW

The play is about remembering where you came from and sharing it with others. It will reach out and massage your conscious with a Brechtian exploration into childhood, and then tickle your funny bone with the flair of a Honeymooners classic.

Deborah Lubar puts in a captivating performance. She deftly moves in and out of five diverse characters. From her quiver of personas, she pulls Loreen, an older woman from Missouri; Hazel, a middle-aged housewife from Rock Bottom, Massachusetts; Opal, an elderly black woman; the cultured and restrained Bishop's wife and Loreen again, at various times, as a young girl playing jacks, and as a troubled teenager.

Director Rhonda Blair utilizes minimal effects in focusing our attention on the characters and their stories. She also sings the songs that are skillfully woven into the fabric of the play. Songs are a vital element of Berries Red — they are the golden threads that weave the patchwork quilt of stories together.

Playwright Pat Schneider's use of spiritual songs is creative and effective. In terms of structure, it enhances the pacing of the play, and facilitates costume and scene changes. Thematically, it is a powerful vehicle of expression for the important and recurring religious overtones. The songs present and epitomize the paradox of contemporary religion as a salve and spiritual vitamin, as well as an opiate and a crutch.

Berries Red is an aesthetic success. It will make you happy, sad, remorseful and nostalgic, and leave you pleasantly warming in its realism and resonance, as the standing ovation at the end of the show proved.

The remaining performances are at 8 p.m., September 28-30, at the East Street Theater in Hadley.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Use your talents and energy wisely and a promotion may be yours in January. Your work is in demand. Travel now and in March. A favorite hobby or cause could lead to a second career. Sign short-term contracts in June. A close relationship blossoms into a full-blown romance. Marriage is a real possibility by fall. Remembering an important lesson you learned in the past could salvage a parent-child relationship.

TODAY'S CHILD is assertive yet shy, eager to play a leadership role at school. He enjoys wearing the latest fashions and is willing to pay higher prices for them. Computer science, mathematics, engineering and medecine hold special appeal. These Virgos tend to marry late in life - and only once. They love children and have the patience needed to be good parents. Horses and dogs are their favorite pets.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Singer Lola Falana, actor Earl Holliman, director Brian De Palma, author O. Henry, exiled Phillipines ruler Ferdinand Marcos, coach Tom Landry.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Avoid stating yopur opinion as if it were the only correct one. Greater diplomacy and sensitivity will win people over to your side. Choose your business and romantic partners more carefully.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Give some thought to turning a hobby into a money-making proposition. If you are unsure of your talents, don't show it. Now is the time to flaunt them. Romance is particularly rosy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A private relationship or financial matter could demand your attention this morning. You meet interesting new contacts who could play an important role in your future. Put your best foot forward.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A good day to ask for a loan. Travel is lucky, too. Accept social invitations, offers of work, and a request that you make a speech. A friend asks probing personal questions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Savor a recent victory without being overbearing. Bragging is a definite "no-no." Exotic foods could have a negative effect on your system. Stick to simple menus. Romance has its usual ups and downs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get an early start today and tackle the long-standing question of priorities. Grant favors to loyal associates. Others look to you for strong leadership. Take more initiative in relationships.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are in an affectionate mood today. Others will be drawn to you if you avoid petty squabbles. Comparison shopping will help you save when buying a major appliance. Check newspaper ads.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Confusion regarding travel arrangements or domestic affairs could surface today. Use your superb analytical powers. Speak up publicly, and you will impress someone influential. An exciting job offer is possible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A burst of confidence helps you complete a difficult assignment. You thrive under pressure, winning the approval of influential people. A promotion or raise is in the works. Set new priorities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your financial plans will boost profits. A small compromise will accomplish miracles where a domestic or business situation is concerned. A gamble may not be worth the risk. Romance looks much more promising than yesterday.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Answer important letters early in the day. Regular exercise will help relieve stress. True mental rapport with member of the opposite sex is possible. Watch your step, however!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your self-reliance is the secret of your success. Startling career developments are featured; get ready for big changes. A financial struggle straightens itself out. A new romance will thrill you. Go slow.

However, this also contributed to inconsistencies. "Our continuity couldn't be maintained," said Martin. "After we started subbing, the 11 starters were never on the field at the same time."

Maine, on the other hand, was twice as aggressive both offensively and defensively with 26 fouls committed as compared to UMass' 12. Sophomore goalkeeper Jon Gruber, who played the entire game, made 10 saves while Maine's Todd Brennan made six saves.

Fifteen minutes into the second half, freshman center-forward Jason Charles of Maine was tripped inside the Minutemen's goal box. His teammate, sophomore Peter Gardola took the penalty kick to score the only goal of the game.

UMass was outshot 23-16. "They were more helter skelter than we expected," said Martin. "Although they had a lot of chances, they just weren't that dangerous."

Frequent loose balls in the midfield added to the volley effect of the game. "Their backs were tight on our forwards," Martin said. "But once we got to the defensive third, they really tightened up."

"I feel this was the best thing to happen to us," said Martin. "This game will be a symbol to us the rest of the season; it can only gear us up."

The seven-hour bus ride home was a long one. One in which there was a lot of silence then a lot of talking. "After the game, we saw some good leadership from our seniors," Martin said. "Evan Buxner and Gael Sullivan, in particular. We pressed things this game; we didn't play as a team and they understand that."

Swartz had run down a ball on the right sideline, and broke away from her defender. She spotted Eynard cutting throught the middle of the box and hit her with a perfect centering pass. Eynard then simply redirected the ball with her right foot into the lower left corner.

"We showed some personality bouncing back after Virginia," said Rudy. "We had a whole roster commitment today, from Alison Hardin fighting in the corner to 'The Chief' [Carrie Koeper] on defense."

And least of all, you can't forget Colette Bowler.

continued to nibble away at each other until the score was tied at 15-all. This is where the world fell in on UMass.

The Minutewomen won the next point, and then nothing else. Hartford got the next three and took the match.

"That was a rookie loss," said UMass coach Carol Ford. "We're rebuilding, and I have a positive outlook. Down the road I don't think we'll lose those."

The final game was a little more of the same for UMass as it now had to deal with a Hartford team that is very good and just hitting its stride. One of the Hawk players who stood out was freshman Kim Diehlmann.

Playing in the second and third games, Diehlmann was all over the place making nice saves and tips whenever her team would need one. And she's only a freshman. With her help the Hawks took the third game and the match.

To put things into a better perspective, UMass is a young team. There are only two returning freshmen on this squad and three of the starters are hurt. Rachel Brett is out with a sprained ankle, Joy Gneimer is disabled with back trouble and Susan Richardson had to play with a sprained foot.

Artificial turf the surface for field hockey

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

All traditionalist feelings aside, if University of Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon had her wish, she would modernize her playing field. That means changing the surface from natural grass to artificial turf.

"I've always wanted an artificial turf field," Hixon said. "This is my eleventh year here and I think I have made the request each of the eleven years I have been here."

The coach has gotten along just fine without it, though. In each of her previous ten seasons, Hixon has guided her UMass teams into the NCAA tournament. But still, no national championships to show for it.

"This is a game that is played on the ground with a little small ball and the truer the roll of the ball, and the more consistent the surface, the better the game," Hixon said. "Turf is becoming a tool of the sport. It is not that we can't function without it. It makes the game better."

Old Dominion University plays all its home games on an artificial turf field down in Norfolk, Va. and the Bonnies just happened to win the national championship last season. Up north, teams such as Boston College and not far down the road, Springfield College play field hockey on the fake stuff.

Two years ago, the University of Michigan made the long haul to Amherst for a date with the Minutewomen. But that game was rained out. So last year, UMass played the Wolverines in Springfield without the home fans. If it had rained, there would still be a chance that the game could be played because on artificial turf, the water can be pushed right off the field.

"I think one of the biggest things for field hockey is the smoothness of it," Hixon said. "We could play in all weather, we could host championships and tournaments on our campus whereas now it's very tenuous because every time we've had a championship here, it has rained or something."

The championships and tournaments are usually held in November when the weather in New England is turning sour, depending on your likings. The cold, rain, wind and snow is not ideal weather for most fall sports, never mind field hockey.

In 1987, the NCAA hosted the Final Four Championship for women's soccer at UMass. The Minutewomen ended up losing the championship game that weekend on a day that saw the temperature fall into the 20s and the wind chill factor into negative numbers.

Such conditions do not allow the athlete to perform at his or her maximum potential. Turf may make it a little easier.

UMass was the best team in the Atlantic 10 Conference last year. The Minutewomen did not lose a conference game and ended up winning the A-10 Tournament at Penn State. Which makes UMass the logical site for this year's tourney, right? Wrong. It will be played elsewhere.

"I know as far as hosting a Final Four or an Atlantic 10 final, we would never be able to do that," Hixon said.

The field hockey team also reached the Final Four in the Fall of 1987 but it was hosted by the University of North Carolina which has an artificial turf field. The Minutewomen fell to UNC in the semifinals and though Hixon would never give that kind of an excuse for a loss, the fact that the Tar Heels play all their home games on artificial turf, clearly gave UNC an advantage.

One could argue that there is a greater risk of injury on grass than on turf. In football and baseball, injuries do occur because a player gets his leg stuck in the turf, but field hockey is a totally different game.

"We're doing mostly straight running," Hixon said. "I think the injuries that happen in field hockey are from getting hit with the ball, getting hit with the stick. Those are the kind of injuries that you find."

Could this field be used for other sports at UMass, like soccer? Holy Cross plays all its home games on turf. After playing there last year though, UMass coach Jim Rudy does not even want to look at the carpet again.

"Last year, we were stuck with it (artificial turf) at Holy Cross and that's the last year we are going to play on turf," Rudy said.

Rudy said that he felt that turf would be great for field hockey but not his own sport, which requires a lot more force on the legs.

"I think the wear and tear on the knees is incredible," Rudy said. "I don't like the injury possibility. I've played on turf, so I know. The ball bounces higher. I think it takes away from the beauty of the game."

But it does not have the same effects on field hockey. In fact, if the creator of the game were around today, he or she would probably love the idea.

"It (artificial turf) makes the game better," Hixon said. "Our skills would be better. Our playing style would be different. The pace of the game that we play would be very different. On grass, the game tends to be real stop and go and slow. On turf, the game tends to move very quickly."

And because the pace of the game is much faster on turf than on grass, the Minutewomen have to prepare differently for a game on the road in which a carpet is played on than for a game that is played on grass. The Totman and Boyden gymnasiums are one option where UMass can work on the smaller aspects of its strategy on turf, such as the penalty corner. When it's possible, the Minutewomen have been allowed to utilize artificial turf fields at Springfield College and Westfield State College for practice purposes.

"We try to develop a style that can be used both on turf and grass," Hixon said. "I think that is a plus for ourselves right there. We don't have a style only to play on one surface, which I think is important. Not everyone in the country has turf. In my mind, everyone is pretty much on the same level."

Like Boston College, who will be coming to Amherst tomorrow for a game with the Minutewomen at Totman Field (3:30 p.m.). BC plays on turf at Chestnut Hill but will have to play on grass. However, there must be some grass field somewhere on BC's campus where the Eagles can practice. You don't just find artificial turf fields out in the woods. They cost bucks, big bucks.

"It's not like going to the store, buying a rug and just lying it down. It is a big expense, Hixon said."

Hixon gave figures of $100,000-$500,000 for the cost of a new turf field. She added though, that given the budget crisis at the University, she would not want to hurt any of the other sports by using a large sum of money for the field.

Hixon has contacted companies in an attempt to get a turf field on an experiemental basis.

"So far it hasn't worked but that doesn't mean I've given up hope," she said.

UMass, James Madison fit to be tied

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

If this were a Yankee Conference game, they might still be playing now.

But it wasn't. Because there is no tiebreaker or overtime in non-conference games, when the final tick went off Saturday at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium and the University of Massachusetts football team stood nose-and-nose with James Madison University in a 28-28 tie, they sent everyone home.

Although he hadn't planned it that way, UMass coach Jim Reid could still be pleased with the results regardless.

"I'm proud of our guys," said Reid. "You needed to be on that sideline and see how many guys went down (with injuries). I'm proud of our effort."

But on the opposite side of the field, James Madison coach Joe Purzycki was less than thrilled with the outcome.

"We should have won the football game, but we beat ourselves with penalties," Purzycki said. "We had an opportunity to win but it comes down to eliminating mistakes."

There were several mistakes for the Minutemen as well, a couple which would prove costly as the game rolled on.

"We had some first game mistakes," Reid said. "We had three jumps (offsides) inside the 10, a high snap, a bad punt, a fumble and a personal foul. We have a lot of things to clean up."

No turnover hurt more though, than the one that came with UMass knocking on victory's door in the final minute.

The Minutemen had just staved off a big JMU attempt, watching a 42-yard field goal by Johnny Perez sail wide left with 1:38 to play. That gave quarterback Roger Baldacci and the offense one last shot at the goal line, or at least a field goal.

After a six-yard quick hit to Mike Tobin, Baldacci overthrew flanker Ron Blauvelt on a fly down the left side. But Blauvelt was pushed out of bounds well after the play and the defender was flagged for a personal foul, moving the Minutemen 15 yards closer to paydirt.

Moving the ball to the JMU 43 with a trio of runs, Baldacci found fullback David Mitchell on a second-and-10 play over the middle. Mitchell was hit hard and fumbled, and Sonny Smith recovered with just 20 seconds to play. The Dukes were unable to do anything in the remaining time.

"I was thinking sideline, and then I got popped," Mitchell said. "I have a sore thumb and (the defender's) helmet went right there. It hadn't been touched all game."

But considering the way things started, the fact that UMass even had the last chance to win is big news. The Minutemen dug themselves a quick 14-0 hole, having missed a couple of stellar opportunities and watched JMU cash in on the ones it had.

Baldacci (20 of 33, 257 yards and two touchdowns), who had never thrown a pass in a collegiate game before Saturday, drove the Minutemen on the opening series to the JMU 6 before penalties pushed them back.

From there, the Dukes wasted little time, scoring on five plays with Waters hitting fullback Greg Medley from 12 yards. Leon Taylor's 6-yard run at 2:46 of the second quarter pushed it to 14-0.

But UMass hadn't come here to be fox fodder in front of the home crowd. On the next series, a key 38-yard strike from Baldacci to Blauvelt helped set up a 10-yard TD pass from Baldacci to Chip Mitchell.

Then, after defensive lineman Chris Colclough recovered a Medley fumble, Jerome Bledsoe capped off the equalizing drive with a 1-yard dive over the top, tying it at 14-all.

The half almost ended that way, but JMU scored on the last play of the half in stunning fashion.

Perez lined up for a 22-yard field goal, but holder Scott Todd took the snap and scrambled right. At first it appeared that there was no help in sight, but halfback Garrett Washington released late and was standing all by his lonesome at the goal line. Todd dumped it to him and JMU took a 21-14 lead at the break.

Field hockey knocks off Syracuse

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team certainly did not have cold feet in the Minutewomen's season opener on Springfield College's artificial turf field Saturday.

UMass fell behind early, but came storming back to squeeze the juice out of Syracuse University, 3-2.

"It had to be 100 degrees on that turf," junior forward Leigh Hallam said.

The sun's rays which hit in the upper 80's on Saturday obviously took its toll on both teams. UMass kept pushing though, and though it wasn't the prettiest of victories, the Minutewomen got the job done.

"We were kind of sluggish," junior defender Lisa Berardinelli said.

The shot that proved to be the winning tally came with about 10 minutes to go in the game when Senior Kathy DeAngelis connected on a penalty stroke for her first goal of the year. The shot put UMass up 3-1.

DeAngelis has been UMass' leading scorer for the past two years but most of her scoring had been from the forward position. In Saturday's game, DeAngelis was getting acclimated to her new position as a midfielder.

"She has a very different role this year, but predominantly she plays in the midfield," Hixon said.

The players had plenty of breaks from the heat as Hixon used all but one of her players. However, the heat was not the main reason why the coach was subbing in so much.

"My objective for our opening game was to see as many people as I could," Hixon said. "I just wanted to get a feel for what groups of people would play well together."

One group of people that played well together was the midfielding corps where the strength of this team seems to lie this season.

"We really started to play well when we had Kathy Phelan, Sherlan Cabralis, Kathy DeAngelis, and Kim Hannigan in the midfield and Beth Thornton as our right back."

Hannigan was instrumental in the Minutewomen's second goal which put UMass on top for good, 2-1, as she was credited with an assist on Mara Fratassio's goal.

Sophomore Lisa Charron earned the start in net and after a shaky start, started to gain some confidence in her first appearance ever in the collegiate ranks.

"I was a little nervous," Charron said. "But I settled down pretty quickly."

The goaltender received a little confidence booster when junior Kerri Fagan tied up the game to get Charron off the hook. The goal also showed an aspect of the Minutewomen's that also may be strong this year, the penalty corner.

UMass graduated the two players that handled the corner last season but Hixon fielded a new combination Saturday which was successful on one occasion. Cabralis inbounded the ball to Kerri Fagan at the point who blasted the ball into the net.

"Our penalty corners worked well I thought for the first time on turf," Hixon said.

When the Minutewomen took control of the game in the second half, it really did not surprise Hixon.

"Our style of play kind of suits us to settle in at the end of the first half and then in the second half to really settle in to a very dominant game when we start to pass the ball well and move it well," Hixon said.

That's what happened on Saturday. The heat did not slow the Minutewomen down as much as their counterparts at Springfield College.

Soccer falls to Maine, 1-0

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Correspondent

The first-game jitters weren't an excuse but they were a factor in the University of Massachusetts men's soccer game Saturday at the University of Maine. Another factor was the weather, with temperatures in the high 80's and humidity in the 90's.

The Minutemen lost their season opener in a 1-0 lackluster effort against the Black Bears of Maine. "We came out flat, didn't play aggressively," said assistant coach John Martin. "We wound up playing their game.

"Our style of play as a team was lost by the first half," said Martin. Because of extreme temperatures and humidity, the Minutemen went deep into the bench within the first 30 minutes of the game. Consequently, almost every player got to play, including senior midfielder Doug Karet and junior back Matt Bearce, both of whom are transfer students set back by ECAC regulations regarding athletic eligibility.

Spikers swept by Hartford, 3-0

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team took on the University of Hartford in its season opener Saturday at Totman Gym and was swept, 15-7, 18-16, 15-8.

Hartford got off to a fast start in the first game, winning the opening six points. The Hawks controlled their sets and from there controlled the game.

UMass had only a few bright spots in this game, one being the play of junior Nancy Sullivan. One of the Minutewomen's points came as Sullivan made a nice dig for a save and then blocked Hartford's return. The next came as she made a diving dig to set up freshman Sharon Panoff for the spike.

Game two would prove to be even more of a disappointment than the first, but only because it was a game that UMass could have won. After winning the first four points, the Minutewomen lost serve and Hartford was able to come back, winning the next six.

UMass bounced back with the next four and the team's

Soccer splits weekend pair

By RICK SETO

Before the women's soccer season started Saturday against Virginia, coach Jim Rudy believed that his 1989 version was better than his 14-3-1 team of the year before. Even though his UMass Reds split their weekend matches, defeating Colgate after losing to Virginia by identical 2-0 scores, he still probably feels the same way.

Colette Bowler is an example of why Rudy feels the way he did before. When asked after the victory over Colgate of Bowler's play, Rudy could only say, "Wonderful."

The play of the senior midfielder has not surprised him or herself. Bowler explains, "I didn't get a lot of playing time last year, but I worked hard over the summer." Apparently, it was enough to warrant some minutes in the two weekend games, and she showed why.

In yesterday's match, –12 in the home reds could be seen knocking loose balls out of her end, pursuing balls on the sidelines, and marking defenders in her area.

Though she is pleased with her play, Bowler still feels that there are aspects of the game that can be worked on. "I still have to be a little more aggressive ... I was hesitant before because I was worried about playing time."

Bowler was part of a substitution group that proved to be a difference in both matches.

Against eleventh-ranked Virginia, the lack of subs was a problem in the blistering heat. In the scoreless first half, UMass could not convert on two grand opportunities. Freshman Lisa Mickleson's shot from the left side bounced off the crossbar and later, April Kater's header off a cross missed an open net.

Though the Reds played well for the first 60 minutes, it was in the final 30 minutes that the Cavaliers clinched the victory. The freshness of the Virginia forwards was just too much for the UMass defenders and eventually led to two goals off mini-breaks.

The Reds wasted little time in notching their first goal of the season in the second game, as Kater didn't miss on a second header at the 1:39 mark. She took a Mickelson cross from the left and headed the ball into the open left corner.

UMass continued applying the pressure, forcing keeper Caroline Chambers to come up with some nice saves. Mickelson lofted another cross toward the goalmouth, but Chambers dove to snatch the ball in midair. Later, Sue Gaudette fought down the right side on a 1-on-2 break, but Chambers was there to pick up the shot off Gaudette's left foot.

Rudy would not make the same mistake as he did in the UVa game, inserting Kim Eynard and Leanne Swartz a little past the midway point of the half. Minutes later, the two highly-touted freshmen combined on a beauty, with Eynard scoring her first collegiate goal.

GSS rethinks making payment to BOG for space and services

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Claiming the Board of Governors is neglecting the needs of graduate students and their organizations, officials from the Graduate Student Senate said the GSS may withold their annual payment of $29,400 to the Board for services and space.

However, both BOG Treasurer Lisa Balentine and GSS Treasurer Lisa Markowitz said there has been no discussion of the issue since last semester, when representatives from the BOG appeared at a GSS meeting to ask the members to reconsider the action.

Markowitz said the members of GSS executive committee first told the board about a "need to make changes" in the senate's contribution to the BOG in late April.

When the Board did not contact the committee, Markowitz said GSS Vice President Pierre Laliberte wrote a letter to the BOG about the possibility of discussing the situation.

At the senate's final meeting last semester, Markowitz said there was discussion about what money should be given to the BOG for the amount of space received in the Student Union for graduate organizations.

There was also a request last semester for tuition waivers for graduate members of the board. Laliberte said for the past two years recruiting BOG representatives from the graduate student community has been difficult.

Working for the BOG is a big committment, Markowitz said. Laliberte said, "Not all students have the energy to do it," and that he has had to recruit undergraduate students to represent the senate at the board.

Balentine told the governors at the last BOG meeting that the GSS must discuss the withholding at a treasurer's council, which includes treasurers of the BOG and GSS, as well as the Student Government Association and the Stockbridge Senate, before they can withdraw the money.

However, she said, no one from the GSS contacted her or the members of the summer Board of Governors to discuss plans for a meeting.

Governor Angela Paquin said the GSS has threatened to withdraw their funds before, and has tried to use the threat to remove RSOs from their office space. "They wanted us to [remove] The Minuteman," she said, adding the staff does have a right to have an office.

The GSS cited the Republican Club's discriminatory actions, and the board's failure to punish the club for them, as a reason for pulling its funds.

In the past, graduate senators have tried to withdraw funding from individual RSOs. Last March, a senator from the Chemistry department proposed a funding cut of five groups because of lack of grad student participation. The request was voted down.

BOG vice president Elizabeth Hart said the gravity and complexity of the issue may lead to a campus-wide referendum by the graduate students. She added the vote may not go in the senate's favor. "I don't think it will go through the Graduate Student Senate,"she said.

Cuts slash handicapped services

By ROB SIMPSON
Collegian Staff

Budget cutbacks at the University of Massachusetts this semester will block the planned installation of ramps and other handicapped facilities slated for buildings on campus, said Raymond Bender, vice chancellor for administration and finance.

Bender said the University's budget of $25,000 a year for handicapped affairs makes it increasingly difficult to implement costly handicapped accessibility projects.

For instance, the cost for one type of ramp constructed for wheelchair access could consume the department's entire budget, he said.

"Twenty-five thousand dollars goes fast," Bender said. "There just isn't any money around to do anything. We have to scrape."

In order to improve service for handicapped students at UMass, he said the state needs to make a larger financial commitment to these issues.

Bender said he submitted a formal statement to the state three years ago requesting an annual budget of $150,000 for handicapped services. The request was approved by the state Board of Regents, but was rejected by the state legislature.

"What we need is [state] funding. We are not able to address the buildings that are not accessible."

"The current budget only allows for "quick-fix things," he said, adding that an increase in state monies would allow the University to implement projects on a larger scale, such as the complete renovation of an entire building, instead of occasional additions.

With the funding Handicapped Affairs has now, the department can only commission work for emergency services, Bender said.

One handicapped student, who did not want to be identified, said Marston Hall is accessible, but other buildings on campus are not.

Bender said the philosophy department in Bartlett Hall, for example, is extremely difficult for wheelchair-bound students to enter because of a small set of stairs in front of the department's main entrance.

The handicapped student said he would like to see an effort by the University to work on the smaller tasks, such as the lack of sidewalk ramps, especially in the Southwest Residential Area.

"With very little effort they can make Southwest accessible," the student said.

The student also mentioned the lack of transportation for handicapped students who take classes in Northampton. Last August transportation to Northampton for handicapped students was cut by the University.

"How can I take a class at Smith if they're not willing to transport us there," he said.

State Bar said to be probing Frank scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Bar has opened preliminary disciplinary proceedings against Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., who recently admitted paying a male prostitute for sex, the Washington Times reports.

The proceedings were triggered when George Washington University professor John F. Banzhaf III last week filed a complaint with the state's Bar Board of Overseers.

Assistant board Counsel Terence Troyar told The Times in an interview from Boston on Friday, "The board's proceedings are confidential, and I can neither confirm or deny that proceedings are under way against any individual."

But Troyar confirmed that such proceeding are automatic once a complaint has been filed. Frank has 20 days to respond in writing, and Banzshaf may then submit a counter-response.

A board inquiry could produce sanctions as serious as disbarment. Frank has never practiced law and is listed as an inactive lawyer by the board.

Such inquiries are normally kept confidential, but Banzhaf has asked Frank to agree to open them.

"He says the matter should be cleared up," Banzhaf said.

"Certainly, the public wants to know, and the best way is through a relatively neutral forum (the Board of Overseers), which has the expertise to resolve these kinds of issues.

Frank, who is gay, admitted last month that he paid prostitute Stephen Gobie for sexual services, then hired the man to be his personal aide. Frank said he knew Gobie was continuing to work as a prostitute, but denied knowledge that Gobie was running a prostitution service from the congressman's basement apartment on Capitol Hill. He said he fired Gobie in 1987 when he found out.

Needy receive free food, friends at Not Bread Alone

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

Tablecloths and silverware. Sweet corn, baked potatoes and chicken. Fresh green salad and fruit.

This might be the table setting at any one of Amherst's numerous restaurants. But it's actually what one finds upon entering Not Bread Alone, a free, upscale soup kitchen.

The kitchen, which opened last April, offers hot lunches every weekend at the First Congregational Church of Amherst, Kim Macdonald the program's coordinator said. The church donates the space for the meals.

Along with free food, the program provides "friendship for adults and children with appetites," according to a poster describing the program.

Macdonald said volunteers feed about 60 people each weekend — the poor, the lonely and those who lack the time or facilities to cook a meal, she said.

"We serve our meals family style to the guests and have toys for their kids," said Macdonald. "It provides social support for the guests and an opportunity for them to network with each other."

Macdonald said she runs the program for purely altruistic reasons.

"I don't have a political agenda," she said. "I just want to be doing it for compassion and service."

Patrons praised Macdonald for her caring approach.

Evelyn Barney, a single mother, said,"[Macdonald] is very careful to preserve people's dignity."

Another woman who did not wish to identify herself agreed, "I don't feel looked down upon here," she said.

Barney said Macdonald pays incredible attention to the needs of the diners and their families. She said during the Amherst Fair last spring, Macdonald gave food, which was served at the fair, to Barney's son and other children so they would still have money for rides.

Philip Bell, who volunteers once a month at Not Bread Alone, said the program satisfies a real need in Amherst.

"Its hard to see poverty in Amherst, but it's here," said Bell.

Bell is a member of The Ark, an Episcopal student group at the University of Massachusetts, one of the several groups that volunteer services to the program.

Macdonald said Not Bread Alone is overseen by the Center for Human Development, a parent agency that also runs the Helen Mitchell House in Amherst and the Jesse House in Northampton, both shelters for the homeless.

Most of the food is acquired from the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts, an agency that distributes surplus food, said Macdonald. The rest is donated by local supermarkets and individuals, she said.

Not Bread Alone also offers a "giveaway," food for people who need it during the week.

Interest group studies area bank accounts

BY DAVID ALLEN FORRESTER
Collegian Correspondent

The return of students to the area has local banks scrambling to handle the scores of applications for savings and checking accounts, but representatives from MASSpirg are urging students to use caution when investing their funds.

The consumer/environmental research group studied five area banks over the summer and compiled a survey. Their results revealed several variations in student services and fees charged to customers.

"A lot of students don't know there is a difference between the banks so they just sign up accounts anywhere," said MASSpirg Co-Chairman Aaron Rome.

Interest rates on savings accounts ranged from 4.5 percent at Bank of New England to 5.5 percent at the Student Credit Union and Heritage NIS, according to the survey. Rates at Baybank and Shawmut, were listed at five percent, Rome said.

The study also showed a variety of service charges for use of automatic teller machines or ATMs, where students may receive money through a machine instead of an actual bank teller.

Rome said if you use an ATM at a bank other than your own, you risk fees of about $1 per transaction. "Most people aren't aware of this and they aren't told unless they ask," he said.

However, Bradley Burger, a customer service representative for Shawmut bank, disputed this claim. "I make a point of telling students about all of the charges," he said.

But, Rome said, some students do not know the minimum balance at their bank and are not told unless they ask. However, a customer service representative at Shawmut bank disagreed and said he always tells students about account charges.

GSS to review projects

Graduate student center to be discussed

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

In its first meeting of the semester tonight, the Graduate Student Senate plans to review summer reports on the progress of several GSS projects started last semester, including a joint effort with other student groups to form a unified voice on campus.

GSS Vice President Pierre Laliberte said the senate will focus on the progress of "The Leadership Coalition," a student group with representatives from the undergraduate Student Government Association, the Faculty Senate and the GSS, among other groups.

The Coalition met several times over the summer to discuss the effects of budget cuts on the University, Laliberte said.

Laliberte said the purpose of the coalition is to provide UMass students with a form of leadership in fighting further budget reductions.

He said the University administrators, including Chancellor Joseph Duffey are not providing this voice.

"We're setting our own agenda for the future of UMass," he said.

Another GSS project under development is the Graduate Student Center, he said. If negotiations are successful, the club may be located in a section of the Faculty Club, he said.

Workshops soothe numbers phobia

Help students deal with math

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

If the thought of working with numbers makes your stomach tighten and your palms sweat, you could be one of the many sufferers of math anxiety.

If so, don't panic.

Dr. Donald Banks, staff psychologist for counselling and academic development at the University of Massachusetts, and Dr. Doris Stockton, associate professor of math have developed a series of math anxiety reduction workshops to help students overcome their fear of math.

They started the workshops when they "recognized that there were a number of students that had been math avoiders," Banks said.

Stockton said math avoidance is a particular problem for UMass students because approximately 65 percent of the majors require math.

As Banks put it, "Once upon a time you could come here and escape math. You can't do that anymore."

The workshops offer students an informal atmosphere in which to discuss the roots of their fears and to find out where to get help with test taking, Banks said.

Banks said they will also be showing the film "Math Anxiety-We Beat It, So Can You," in which adult professionals discuss how they overcame their anxieties.

Stockton said students usually uncover two reasons for their difficulties with math.

"At some stage, the student has been asked to do math at a level they're not ready for," she said. "Or they have been unintentionally intimidated by their mother, father, teacher, or a well-meaning relative."

Stockton said that when students discover there are other people who feel the same way about math as they do, it seems to help them.

"It helps students to realize that their difficulty with math isn't because they're dumb or they can't do it," she said.

Stockton said the workshops can help not only undergraduates, but teaching assistants and older students as well.

"We've been holding the workshops for eight years," she said. "I've learned something new every time."

The workshops are offered from 4:30 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Mondays, Sept. 11, 18, and 25, in room 1634 of Lederle Graduate Research Center.

The center would provide a place for graduate students to socialize and meet people their own age, which GSS Executive Officer Bruce Tull said is difficult in the Amherst area.

"A lot of colleges have graduate student centers," he said. "There's no place you can go around here if you're in your upper 20s and 30s."

Laliberte said the GSS plans to finance the center by "re-prioritizing" the items in the senate's budget.

The GSS may reach this goal by reducing their annual payment for services to the Board of Governors, Tull said.

In other business:

- The GSS will take nominations for finance committee members and elections committee members during the meeting.
- Reports will also be delivered concerning finance issues, to be followed by Officers' and Committee reports.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Community offers solutions to crisis

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

In a community as large as the University of Massachusetts, rape is not uncommon. And, because of recent increases in reported rapes on campus, community leaders are making education, awareness, and increased safety measures a priority.

The statistics for rape on campus are available from a variety of sources - and all of their numbers are different. But University sources conclude that rape, or the number of rapes being reported to authorities, is increasing.

The Department of Public Safety's annual report states that in 1986, three rapes were reported to University police; in 1987, there were six reported rapes; and in 1987, there were 13 rapes reported.

The Everywoman's Center's Against Violence Against Women Program (AVAW) also reports that incidents of rape on campus have increased in the past year.

The center provided services for 29 reported rapes over a period of nine months, from September 1987 to May 1988. Yet, the next year, the center handled 26 reported rapes in only seven months, from September 1988 to March 1989.

Why has the number of reported rapes increased so dramatically in the University community for the past two years? And is it just that more rapes are being reported to the authorities because of increased awareness, or are there actually more rapes being committed?

"It's a combination of both," said Stacy Roth, coordinator for the Education/Advocacy Program at the Everywoman's Center.

"A higher number of rapes are being reported, and from the nature of the numbers, it's pretty obvious that there is an increase of rapes," she said.

Asked about the discrepancy between police reports, and the findings of the AVAW Program, Roth said she believes most people are too afraid to report rape to police. "They go to where they feel safer - where they have total confidentiality," she said.

The university has taken steps to provide more lighting on campus on pathways, install and repair emergency telephones in campus parking lots, and most recently, to reinstate mounted police in an effort to patrol pathways that are inaccessible to police cars.

With more steps being taken to make the campus more accessible to women at night, some hope that this will lead to awareness that reporting incidents of rape will actually help the community.

Associate Director of Public Safety, Larry Holmes, encouraged people to report incidents of rape.

"Reporting rape is also prevention," Holmes said, adding that any report helps both the victim and the community.

Reporting rape to authorities may prevent another rape from occurring, but it does not provide support for the victim, nor does it involve the community, Roth said.

"When it's time for discipline, the problem has already occurred," said Roth.

"Really, the base must be education [about rape and sexual assault] at all levels of the university," she said.

"We need to educated all individuals," Roth said, "faculty and staff as well as students - who can in turn put that information back out into whatever they're doing."

Roth stressed that there must be an "emphasis and priority" of education of these issues on campus in order to cut down on the numbers of rapes.

Already the university is taking steps through the Everywomen's Center to see that education is emphasized. New women students receive information about services available at the university for counseling, rape, sexual assault, etc., as part of their introduction to UMass, said Roth.

Education is a message that the university is sending, she said, and it must be an ongoing priority.

"Unfortunately, unless people can see the issue as concrete and in front of them, the level of awareness goes down," Roth said.

Gretchen Krull, coordinator of the Peer Sexuality Program at University Health Services said that generally, students are aware that rape is a problem, "but there's still confusion about what's o.k. and what's not o.k."

The Everywoman's Center provides counseling, education and preventive services through their Counselor/Advocate (C/A) and Educator/Advocate (E/A) Programs. The C/As offer a Rape Hotline for Diversity class expanded

By KATERI WALSH
Collegian Staff

The Women's Studies Department got an unexpected boost this semester, as pre-registration in their introductory course more than doubled from last year, according to professor Arlene Avakian.

"The idea that we can reach 300 students per semester is very exciting," Avakian said.

Avakian attributed the rise in enrollment in part to the fact that it fulfills both the Interdisciplinary and the Diversity requirements of the university's general education requirements.

However, she also cited a steady increase in demand for and enrollment in the course in recent semesters.

"As we teach more students, more of the word gets out. It has become a very popular course," Avakian added.

She said that the department decided to expand the course for two reasons. "We were concerned with students not being able to get their general education requirements fulfilled. At the same time, the opportunity to teach a wide variety of students about women's issues is always compelling."

In order to accommodate the larger class, the department has increased the teaching assistant staff from two to five.

The TA staff includes women from such fields as communications, history and anthropology. Their experiences also encompass such areas as law and battered women's shelters.

"We are really attracting an exceptional level of TAs," Avakian said.

Junior pre-education major Andrea Cummings said she took the class on the advice of friends who are Women's Studies majors, and to gain a more rounded view of women throughout history.

She said that she expected to feel liberated by the class, and added, "It's one of those classes that you just never want to graduate without having taken."

O'Neil Hardy, a freshman majoring in psychology, said that after ten years in the military, when he began working in civilian jobs, he noticed that what a lot of employers look for in a male applicant is diversity.

Hardy added that many of the men with whom he worked had taken women's studies or related classes.

Kelly Bovio, on the other hand, said she was taking the class "mainly because it's an I-D," but also said she hopes to gain "a new perspective on certain women's issues like abortion."

The class, which Avakian said has remained approximately 10% male, has a majority of underclassmen, but also has some seniors who need the class in order to graduate.

She said that the issues of race, class, and sexuality are as central to the course as gender, and that they plan to examine how all these issues are interrelated.

"We attempt to place woman at the center of interpretation, at the same time being very careful not to neglect the particularities of women's lives," Avakian said.

female victims of violence that is staffed by trained peer counselors 24 hours a day.

"We're here to support and counsel women [who've been victims of rape], and to help them get control of their lives," said Deb Levy, an assistant coordinator of the C/A Program at the center.

The E/A Program stresses that education about violence against women is a preventive measure, and they provide workshops through RSO's and dorms on campus.

"We have workshops about date rape, pornography, media imaging of women, sexual assault, battering and incest," Roth said.

"Awareness must be a university wide effort," she said, adding that it is important for people to remember that the public never hears about many of the rapes that occur in the community.

There will be a meeting for people interested in writing for women's issues Wednesday at 5 p.m.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

A fight in name only

Two hundred people were hurt as White riot squad officers marched through townships in Johannesburg, South Africa shooting and whipping by-standers and participants in a peaceful rally protesting unfair "Whites only" elections.

F.W. de Klerk, the leader of their predominantly Black country claims to be reforming the system, but his claim is full of holes and hypocrisies. Archbishop Desmond Tutu, a leader in the peaceful protests to end Apartheid (the racist doctrine that South Africa abides by), marched with a group of children down to a police station. They were tear-gassed. Just in the last couple of weeks peaceful protestors had been whipped, shot with rubber bullets and attacked with tear gas.

Meredith O'Brien

These are echoes of a past that we, as a nation, shun. We would like to think that things such as blatant racism and such abhorrent violence never happened here. That the United States of America practiced what it preached — freedom and justice for all.

At least that's what we would like to think.

Over the Labor Day weekend, students from predominantly black colleges participated in the annual Greekfest held in Virginia Beach, Va.

Like many college festivals, the students partied, danced and become rather loud. It's more than likely that some students will get rowdy when thousands of college students congregate in one place. I seem to recall stories of wild and obnoxious behavior resulting from the massive Spring Break migration to Daytona Beach, Florida every year.

While students were busy enjoying themselves at Virginia Beach, some became a bit wild, drinking and dancing in the streets, causing traffic problems. What was different about this typical college festival was that police hurled smoke bombs into the crowd of partying students as a way to "break them up."

This is not your orthodox method of breaking up a party. I don't remember hearing of riot police or smoke bombs breaking up parties in Daytona Beach where the partyers were predominantly White.

A riot ensued, with thousands of students clogging the streets and looting stores. Police tried to put take control of the situation by beating back students with clubs. This is a country where people are supposedly treated with the same police procedures, the same due process. There were no clubs used in Daytona.

"It's like we were being singled out because we are young and Black," a New York student attending the Greekfest commented.

In Bensonhurst, New York, a Black teen was bludgeoned to death by a mob of White teenagers armed with baseball bats. A week later, the business district of Bensonhurst was vandaled as the result of the youth's death.

This summer the Supreme Court made a series of decisions that rolled back the progress of Civil Rights legislation and made it more difficult, if not impossible and outrageously expensive, to prove discrimination.

Meanwhile, our president is waging a "War against drugs." He has made no statement and took no action regarding any of the aforementioned incidents, though I did catch a long article devoted to Bush's victorious hooking of a fish.

It would be rather hypocritical not to draw the comparison of de Klerk and Bush. Though in the United States nothing is labeled "Whites only" in public, we are nominally fighting racism and discrimination. But what messages is the American government really sending to our Black community?

We may appear to be reforming our system, but our claim is full of holes and hypocrisies too.

Living on friendly terms

Residents of Amherst are asking for responses to a mutually shared problem: off-campus drinking, noise and blasting stereos.

Many students object to the noise, and many residents work at the University, so the problem is not a division between 'Town' and 'Gown;' nor between youth and age. If a group of 80 year-old men and women were to party drunkenly and to drive as dangerously, the same objections would arise.

When National Public Radio's 'All Things Considered' did a program on racial tensions at UMass and Civility programs, Black students explained that they did not attend White parties, especially at fraternities, because all that the white students did at parties was to get drunk.

Might the University's 'Civility' Programs include reminders to all students that working people, retirees and children live near the university? Do some students consider all the surrounding areas part of their campus?

Might the quieter fraternities and sororities put pressure on the heavy-drinking groups to behave responsibly, instead of protecting them and then complaining about the injustice of fraternities' worsening reputations?

Could the university discourage heavy drinking off-campus as well as on campus? Last semester we witnessed one instance of party drinking ending in death — a needless tragedy.

Students who give the university a bad name are a small minority. If those who participate in noisy drinking parties were to become aware of how they disrupt others' lives; if everyone kept the noise below the level where police need be called; if those who live near frats can have friends visit without cat-calls; if no one is awakened by brakes screeching and engines roaring at 2 a.m.; if everyone lives so that others' lives are not ruined — residents and students may once again live together on mutually friendly terms.

How can we accomplish this?

Lorie Leininger
Amherst

(Editor's note: Five other Amherst residents signed this letter.)

A lesson in grammar

Rather than cutting students and faculty, as recently suggested by Provost Richard O'Brien, I think improvements in both the qualtiy of education at UMass and its image to taxpayers could be made by hiring administrators who know how to speak English.

"This has got to be maintained as a quality place, if not, you're going to have easy access to a crummy education"— Provost O'Brien ("UMass takes steps to cope with cuts," Sept. 11). If the Provost looked beyond Whitmore, he might learn that UMass is much more than a place, and "quality" is a noun, not an adjective. "Crummy" is not even a word. "Crumby," the obsolete word that gave rise to the slang "crummy," means "broken into little pieces."

As a satisfied three time UMass graduate, I know that our University's "crumbs" are a source of productivity and pride; it is the administrative "cake" that sticks in your throat. On second thought, hiring better administrators would probably invite the argument that they should be paid more, a ludicrous proposition.

Better to fire the administrators, turn Whitmore into science labs, and give our crumby University back to the students and faculty.

Cheers for Zeta Psi

In this day in age when the only thing that most college students think about is alcohol, it is nice to see that one of the fraternities on campus is trying to take the lead in alcohol awareness.

The fraternity system at the University of Massachusetts has taken a lot of heat recently. But as this years' rushes get under way, Zeta Psi fraternity is trying to do something about social awareness. As a gentleman who has never been interested in joining a fraternity, Zeta Psi's new posters are quite impressive.

The one that I am referring to has a picture of the Tasmanian Devil on it saying, "Zeta Psi warns you not to drink and drive."

I feel that Zeta Psi should be commended for taking a stand against drinking and driving. In a society that popularizes drinking, one of our fraternities is realizing that alcohol is one of our biggest problems.

The brothers should be proud of themselves. I congratulate Zeta Psi on their poster, and urge other members of the Greek System to follow Zeta Psi's lead in taking a stand against drinking and driving.

Over $8 billion of our tax dollars may be appropriated to fight the Drug War if President Bush gets his way.

How would you define a "Drug War?" Do you believe in the legalization of marijuana, cocaine or other drugs? What determines if a drug should be available to the general public? Do you have any answers? Submit your column or letter regarding this drug "problem" by Thursday, September 15 to appear in Friday's "Point/Counterpoint" section.

Take a stand. Your point of view is worth reading.

Shedding my image

Big guy.

Yep, I've been called big guy since I arrived at the University of Massachusetts in the fall of 1986. I don't know why everyone called me that, but no matter where I went or who I talked to, the nickname eventually applied was "Big guy."

Last semester, the more appropriate name would have been "Bigger guy," or perhaps "Too big guy." My weight, never my strong point, creeped up into the 230s, then the 240s, reaching a plateau on May 6 of 252.

David R. Mark

I was a house, a veritable monstrosity of gluteus maximus. Frankly, I was just plain maximus all over. Too many pizzas, Buffalo wings, calzones, subs and other late night goodies. All those goodies proved baddies for my general shape.

May 6 remains a day that will long last in my memory, for it was that day that I revolted, vowing to lose my suddenly pumped-up spare tire.

Dieting was not overly difficult. By cutting out several foods, such as French fries and Ben & Jerry's Cherry Garcia ice cream, I was able to go home nine pounds lighter, although several pounds heavier than when I left for UMass in September, 1988.

My parents, aware of my diet and prepared for the worst, told me I was too heavy. It wasn't physical appearance they were concerned with, but my health. Diabetes runs in my family; no one wanted me to be its latest victim.

So the dieting continued, and soon became even easier. Combined with playing basketball at the YMCA three times a week, the pounds started coming off; the shape began looking less like a VW Bug and more like, er, a Ford Fiesta. (Less curves and more straight lines.)

My weight fell through the 240s, the 230s and the 220s, falling to 215 — a net loss of 37 pounds.

Of course, all that weight off wouldn't matter one iota if no one back at UMass noticed. My parents assured me I looked better, but I needed proof from those who hadn't seen me all summer.

Off to school I went.

"Look at you," said one of our staffers.

"Wow," said a second.

I was happy.

But now I have a new goal. Looking through the Chicago Cubs media guide a friend gave me, I noted that most players my height (6'2") weighed between 180 and 200.

Ever since I was a little fella growing up in Naperville, Ill., I wanted to be a Cub. And to be a true blue Cub, one must look like a Cub. In other words, I have to lose about 20 more pounds to look like a Cub.

It's all just a matter of time.

And a "Big guy" effort.

MINI-EDITORIAL NO. 1: The Cubs, with their win over the St. Louis Cardinals Sunday, are now 2½ games over St. Louis in the National League East. To all the beloved Mets fans out there, I have this to say: Who was picked to finish first, and who's in first? If the Cubs clinch the pennant, all bonafide Cubs fans can come over to my place for a wild brewskie benefit.

MINI-EDITORIAL NO. 2: Freya Batlle, a member of the Collegian's night graphics crew, died last Friday of complications from internal injuries caused by a hit and run accident.

Having worked with Freya on the night staff, I know how hard she worked and how much she cared for others, and they cared for her.

She will be missed not only as a vital part of the night staff, but also as a person whom was loved and who gave love to others.

First Week rocks the Bluewall

ROBERT E. FISCHER

Savage Garden, Chucklehead and Meta Terra
Bluewall Friday, September 8

The University of Massachusetts ended "First Week 89'" in grand style, with music, dancing, and good times. The evening began with Savage Garden. They played a good set, considering a reported mix-up in the order of the bands. They made good use of the situation, even managing to draw some of the audience to the dance floor.

REVIEW

Chucklehead and the Bozo Horn Patrol managed to take only a few minutes to set up, thus keeping much of the audience in the Bluewall when they began their dynamic and explosive set. They struck a chord with the audience instantly, taking no time to get the audience on their feet and dancing. Chucklehead left a lasting impression on UMass. Alex Webb, a junior art major said, 'They were great! They had a good beat, and the variety was there." Chucklehead left the stage leaving the audience exhausted from dancing.

Meta Terra probably couldn't have taken the stage at a worse time, following an act like Chucklehead. However, they performed excellently, despite the reduced crowd size, ending probably one of the best events UMass has sponsored in a long time.

New folk music collection certain to please

By NICHOLAS OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Legacy:A Collection of New Folk Music.
Various Artists.
Windham Hill

The state of North American folk music is in lush profusion, and the Windham Hill music label has plucked a redolent bouquet from the genre's fertile field.

Legacy: a Collection of New Folk Music offers a diverse, illuminating spectrum of 15 quality songs, one per artist, by some very gifted poet-musicians. Even if they never ascend to the lofty level of recognition (and they just might) as their more widely celebrated peers such as Tracy Chapman, Michelle Shocked and Suzanne Vega, (who sings harmony on Bill Morrissey's "Handsome Molly") they can be proud of their contributions to this potent pastiche.

The majority of these artists have been plying their craft for years, even decades. Their dedication is our reward in the honest emotion of their colorful, imaginative, haunting and hilarious stories of sharecroppers, illegal aliens, streetwalkers, racism, war, drug addiction, Salvador Dali, a handful about the vicissitudes of romance and even a ditty about "New Toys".

RECORD REVIEW

Many of the lyrics are poignant and sad such as Steve Roack's "Old World" and Anne Bourne's"Blue Ballet", but both these songs serve to strengthen rather than depress the listener, so touching is the music. However, this gripping pathos is humorously tempered by the inclusion of Uncle Bonsai's "Men and Women" and Kirk Kelly's folk punk blaster "Go Man Go".

Somewhere in between the tragedy and the comedy, John Gorka couches his lament for an ex-lover with such clever phrases, you don't know whether to commisserate or celebrate. At the same time Bill Morrisey's tale of a group of illegal kitchen workers, "My Name is Joe" is sad but witty in the classic populist style of the immortal Woody Guthrie.

For the most part, the collection features excellent vocals and harmonies, acoustic and electric guitars, piano and keyboards, bass and drums.

Ex-Fairport Convention member Ian Matthews, whose career spans 22 years, performs Jules Shear's " On Squirrel Hill" a capella while the Blue Rubies deliver a tasty twist on Prince's "When You Were Mine".

As if prophesising this collection, the unofficial dean of American folk music, Pete Seger has written the liner notes, "And when these fingers can strum no longer/Hand the old guitar to young ones stronger."

The UMass Arts Council

Founded in 1966, the Arts Council fosters excellence and scope in the arts on campus. The Arts Council's activities include:

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR THE ARTS

Through two programs, the Arts Council awards grants totalling over $200,000 annually to support RSOs, campus galleries, the Residential Arts Program, and other UMass groups that present arts events and programs.

ARTS INFORMATION

Every two weeks, the Arts Council publishes the Arts Calendar, a listing of arts activities on the Five College campuses. The calendar is available at galleries, box offices, and information centers at all five colleges.

ARTS MANAGEMENT TRAINING

The Arts Council supports arts management courses and internships for UMass students through a program offered by the Arts Extension Service, 545-2360. A two-day, two-hour workshop series, conducted by the Program Director of the Arts Council, on arts programming and grantwriting, will be held on Sept. 13 and 18 and October 4 and 11 from 3-5pm. Free; registration required. For further info contact the Arts Council.

PUBLIC ART

The Arts Council is actively involved in expanding the public art collection at UMass. The Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library, an exhibition space for UMass faculty and students, will host a closing reception for the summer exhibition of works by Karen Dolmanisth on Wednesday, September 20 from 4-6pm and an opening reception for the fall exhibition on Wednesday, September 27 from 4-6pm. Rain dates Thursdays, September 21 and 28. The Council commissioned a graduate student, now alumnus, and a distinguished Massachusetts-based artist to redesign the Student Union Plaza and has recently, with the assistance of two grants from the National Endowment for the Arts commissioned a renowned landscape architect and artist to redesign Metawampe Lawn. A memorial to UMass' first sitting president, William Smith Clark, was designed by a student and is in the final design stages. This past year students in the Art and Landscape Architecture departments participated in a competition to design a commemorative garden to Helen Curtis Cole, the University's first and only Dean of Women, who served from the mid-1940s to the early-1970s. The garden is proposed for a site between Old Chapel and Goodell Building.

The Civility Mural, designed and created by graduate art student Jonathan Kohrman, was initiated last year by environmental design student Jon Satz. The Council managed the project in cooperation with the Graduate Art Students Association and UARTS; the project was funded by Provost Richard D. O'Brien, the Arts Council, the Art Department, and GASA. Technical assistance was provided by the Physical Plant Department. A reception to celebrate its completion will take place on Thursday, Sept. 7 from 3-5pm at the Flagstone Terrace, Campus Center. Refreshments and music! Rain date: Sept. 8.

Early fall events/activities:

Sept. 7	Reception to celebrate completion of Civility Mural
Sept. 13	Arts Programming and Grantwriting Workshop
Sept. 18	Arts Programming and Grantwriting Workshop
Sept. 20	Reception, Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library
Sept. 27	Reception, Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library
Sept. 27	First deadline for grant applications

The Arts Council is funded primarily by a portion of the Arts Fee. The Council includes undergraduate and graduate students, alumni, faculty, and professional staff representatives who are appointed each April for the following academic year by representative senates.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Important career developments will reach a climax by Christmas. Get ready to travel; renew your passport. Public service will be richly rewarded by February. Stock tips pay off handsomely by Easter, giving you a chance to set up your own business. Follow an older, more experienced person's advice. A summer reunion could set the stage for happy new romance. Avoid rushing things. Resist the temptation to marry someone you meet on the rebound.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Linda Gray, country singer George Jones, the Padres' Mark Thurmond, comedian Ben Blue, Olympian Jesse Owens.

ARIES (march 21-April 19): You get good news about your job. Buy something nice for your home. Your entire family will benefit if you showcase your leadership skills. Purchase real estate as an investment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be cautious about money; do not carry too much cash. A former associate turns up with fascinating information about someone you lost track of. Listen to your mate's advice. Keep secrets.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your imagination and creativity make things easier to deal with today. You may find yourself heading up an important project soon. Attend a lively social function tonight. Romance waits in the wings.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Advantageous conditions for learning are shaping up now. Be more aware of the positive influences in your life. Take a constructive view of what your friends are saying; they want to help.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A great day for career matters, innovations and seminars. Use your intelligence and training to full advantage. A practical suggestion pleases higher-ups. A new book makes an excellent give for a child.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The spotlight is on savings and investments today. Seek expert's advice if you are unsure what to do next. Your philosophy may need some revision. Give more thought to what you say and do.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your job is difficult at times, but will bring you widespread praise and higher profits. A neighbor could be a better friend than you know. Welcome this person into you inner circle.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Play your hunches and you will come out on top. You need to set boundaries within a relationship. Fascinating new friends are part of the picture. Welcome happy romance. Family applauds your choice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Romance can be yours today. Give your partner as much support as possible. Your home may need a face-lift. Decide about painting or renovating. Encourage family to offer suggestions.

CARPICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Conditions at home take on added importance. A family friend or teacher can help you deal with your feelings about your childhood. Better eating habits will give you more energy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Contact influential people who can advise you about your career or business venture. A brief encounter could lead to new social connections. A blind date exceeds your wildest expectations. Avoid rushing things.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): In business and romance, adopt a wait-and-see attitude. Put your ideas in writing to avoid misunderstandings. Joint financial matter improve after you consult experts. Your loved ones displays new loyalty.

TODAY'S CHILD appears calm and controlled on the surface but is a secret worrier. A loyal and loving friend, this Virgo makes few demands. An early interest in geography and travel should be encouraged. This child will enjoy keeping a journal which could later be turned into a play or novel. Traditional and family-oriented, these Virgos will want to celebrate holidays in a big way. They grow more spiritual as they reach their middle years.

Sunday (and Saturday) at Eight is great

• Folk and jokes from Wheeler

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Cheryl Wheeler
Amherst College
Sunday, September 10

When Cheryl Wheeler walked onstage at Amherst College as part of the Sundays at Eight series, it was hard to believe that she was a folk singer. With her burly looks and gruff voice, she looked and sounded like a truck driver.

But as soon as she announced, "Welcome to Sundays at eight-ten", and broke into the beautiful "Half a Buck", she had the coffeehouse-like crowd under her control. Her beautiful voice was reminiscent of Joni Mitchell, and it was hard to believe such a voice came out of that body.

The songs ranged from the beautiful, ("Arrow" and "Raining") to the wildly hilarious ("Little Kids" and "Don't Forget the Guns"). "Little Kids"is a dandy sarcastic tune about what happens when her friends bring their kids over her house and throw rocks at her dogs. "Don't Froget the Guns" is an anti-NRA song about a family that goes on vacation and brings all their guns along in case they meet up with some trouble. The sarcastic, redneck humor is on the same level as that of Randy Newman.

Wheeler kept the crowd entertained with short anecdotes before each song. The personal stories were both amusing and touching, and in some cases, they were even superior to her beautiful songs.

Wheeler even overcame the annoyance of one woman in the audience who kept requesting songs, making stupid jokes and asking questions. When she asked Wheeler if she was ever a hippie, the singer replied, "Of course I was a hippie. No self-respecting person that's 38 years old isn't going to admit to being a hippie. I don't remember much of it though because I smoked pot all the time - I think."

Wheeler ended her show with "Going Home," a haunting song about returning to her home in Maryland. Her encore consisted of a great story picking on health food addicts and praising junk food and airplane food. She then went into her infamous junk food song which contained lines like, "Let's eat things to kill ourselves," and "We'll all get fat and gross together."

• Look mom ... no instruments

By LINDA SPEIRS
Collegian Correspondent

Susanne Barkan
Amherst College
Saturday, September 9

Buried deep in Western Massachusetts is a truly remarkable singer, a woman with the rare ability to make a song live. That woman is Susanne Barkan. Working with her at Buckley Hall on September 9th were Janet Savage, Dave Davies, Mark Johnson, Karma Martell, Maria Robbins, Paul Zimmermann, and Pella Shelley—all singers, all enormously talented, and all graduates of Bobby McFerrin's Masterclass.

I loved it. You are reading a rave review because these people can do anything, just anything, with their voices. Have you ever heard a man who really sounds like a double bass? Well, Johnson does. Have you ever heard eight people sing a Bach canto and sound like wind instruments? Well, these people do. Robbins' song "Biko" is an instrumental for voices—think about it.

If you didn't go, you missed Zimmerman singing "Roxanne," (an American folk song written by an "Englishman in New York.") accompanied by Barker and Johnson on the voice; Davies, accompanied by everyone else, did "A Different Bob", a sort of 1940's jazz piece. Shalvey played a digereedo (I've no idea how to spell it, but it sounds like wolves howling, traffic thundering, birds calling, and souls in torment.), and most of all you missed Barkan, Backed by this brilliant troupe, singing the death song of the last great whale. I cried all the way through it. And if you didn't go, you still missed more than this.

Show cancelled

According to Jeff Glassman, coordinator of the Board of Governors Program Council, who sponsored the event, tonight's Saturn V Laser Rock Show has been cancelled due to broken lasers.

The show will be rescheduled. Tickets for tonight's show will be honored at that time. Refunds will also be available at Tix.

Update from the local M*A*S*H* unit: Several players left Saturday's game with various injuries or heat-induced cramps. Defensive tackle John Creamer was lost on the first play from scrimmage with a dislocated fibula.

"You never see that happen," Reid said.

Defensive tackle Steve Brothers also left the game with cramps, but his shoulder injury should be all right for him to play Saturday at Lehigh. Tailback Steve Olson (stomach) and tackle Jay Gabbe (groin) should also play Saturday.

Around the Yan Con: In other conference action Saturday, Delaware and Maine got off to fast starts in the league, as predicted. The Blue Hens took a 28-21 decision from much-improved Boston University, while Maine topped New Hampshire, 24-7.

Rhode Island, chosen to finish last in preseason, crushed Richmond 45-14. In non-league bouts, Connecticut topped Central Connecticut, 27-9, and Villanova fell to Holy Cross, 38-17.

Washington St. breaks into poll

SEATTLE (AP)—When Washington State beat Brigham Young last week, first-year coach Mike Price jokingly suggested the Cougars deserved to be ranked No. 1 because they were the only 2-0 team in the nation. On Monday, Prices Cougars were 23rd in the Associated Press college football poll.

"I'm disappointed," he said tongue in cheek. "Our 24-hour ranking as No. 1 didn't come through Friday."

While traditional powers Penn State and Florida State dropped out of the rankings, Washington State, which beat BYU 46-41, moved into the Top 25 along with Washington, now 15th in the poll.

Showdown set for nation's top teams

(AP)—Traditional powers Penn State and Florida State dropped out of the rankings, while rivals Washington and Washington State moved into the Top 25 today in The Associated Press college football poll.

Meanwhile, Notre Dame and Michigan retained the top two spots heading into Saturday's showdown at Ann Arbor, Mich. Neither team played last week.

The Fighting Irish received 37 first-place votes, 22 more than Michigan. Third-ranked Miami has No. 1 on five ballots, with the other three first-place votes from sports writers and broadcasters going to No. 4 Nebraska.

Rounding out the Top 10 are Auburn, Oklahoma, Clemson, Colorado, Arkansas and Illinois.

Miami, playing its first game under coach Dennis Erickson, routed Wisconsin 51-3 on Saturday. Nebraska pounded Northern Illinois 48-17 and Auburn crushed Pacific 55-0 in their openers.

There were no changes in the top five, but Oklahoma moved up two spots after beating Baylor 33-7, Clemson rose three places by downing Florida State 34-23 and Colorado went from No. 9 to No. 8 following a 45-20 victory over Colorado State. Arkansas and Illinois did not play.

Syracuse, which beat Temple 43-3, jumped three spots to No. 11. Next are West Virginia, Southern California, Pittsburgh, Washington, Alabama, Tennessee, Houston and North Carolina State.

UCLA plunges from No. 6 to No. 20 following its 24-6 loss to Tennessee, which vaulted into the rankings for the first time this season.

Louisiana State is No. 21, followed by Texas A&M, Washington State, Iowa and Mississippi State.

Penn State, No. 12 last week, dropped out of the rankings after falling to Virginia 14-6. The Nittany Lions, coming off their first losing season in 50 years, have lost six of their last seven games. Clemson's win dropped Florida State to 0-2 for the first time since 1976, Bobby Bowden's first season at Tallahassee. The Seminoles, who were No. 6 in the preseason poll and No. 16 after an opening loss to Southern Mississippi, are unranked for the first time in three years.

Washington made the biggest jump, moving into the rankings at No. 15 on the heels of its 19-6 victory over Texas A&M. The loss dropped the Aggies, who beat LSU in their opener, from No. 15 to No. 22.

Right behind Texas A&M is Washington State, which improved to 2-0 by beating Brigham Young 46-41 on Thursday night.

Mississippi State is making its first appearance in the rankings since 1986. The Bulldogs gained recognition with a 26-23 win over Southern Mississippi, which was No. 18 at the time.

Southern Miss, BYU and Arizona, which was beaten by Texas Tech 24-14, fell out of the Top 25.

Iowa was No. 23 in the preseason poll, lost its ranking last week and is now back at No. 24. That's a lot of movement for a team that is yet to play a game.

No. 2 Michigan, No. 9 Arkansas and No. 16 Alabama also don't play their openers until Saturday.

The Notre Dame-Michigan game will be the first meeting between No. 1 and No. 2 since the top-ranked Fighting Irish beat Southern California 27-10 last November.

It will be the 25th meeting between the top two teams since the AP poll started in 1936.

Minutemen go Wildcatting

Minutemen travel to Durham to play UNH

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Correspondent

After a nebulous effort in their season opener, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team heads to the University of New Hampshire to scrap with the Wildcats today at 3 o'clock.

New Hampshire stands unranked in the Atlantic 10. Last year the Wildcats fell 3-0 to the Minutemen in a home match. The Wildcats have not defeated Jeff Gettler's troops in six consecutive seasons.

The Wildcats are currently 0-2-0 for the season. With Army as their first match, UNH hung through a tedious 3-2 overtime defeat. Senior midfielders Scott Brennan and Bill Bjork scored the Wildcats' goals for the game. Brennan received All-New England Honorable Mention last year as a Wildcat and remains to be one of the Wildcats' top players. The competition against Central Connecticut also proved to be just as harrowing, ending in a 1-0 overtime. As confirmation of the Wildcats' down-to-the-wire-type of play, assistant coach John Martin said, "They're even more helter skelter than Maine; they're a kick-it-and-run team.

"We need to score early in the game to clinch a win. Once we do that, it could easily be a 3-0 match." Martin said. "They're a committed team, very aggressive. We're going to have to play our game or we could see some trouble from them."

Some changes in the Minutemen's line up could make for an interesting twist on their second away game of the season. During the game against Maine on Saturday, sophomore back Darren Stone injured his knee. The extent of the injury and the amount of time Stone will be out this season has not yet been determined at this time. To start in Stone's position will be sophomore midfielder Tom Novajasky. Regardless of the starting change-up, Martin inferred Stone may see some playing time against the Wildcats.

Another significant change involves the goalkeeper. Freshman Steve Armenti will be making his collegiate debut today at UNH. "We're excited about that," Martin said. "[Armenti] was one of our top recruits. This will be a great opportunity for him."

One of the interesting aspects of this particular game for the Minutemen is that Ted Garber (son of Dick Garber, UMass men's lacrosse team head coach) is the coach of the Wildcats' men's soccer team.

Gary Disarcina joins Angels

Gary Disarcina, a former shortstop for the University of Massachusetts baseball team, has been called up to the Major Leagues by the California Angels.

Disarcina, who last played for UMass in 1988, was drafted in the sixth round of the Amateur Draft by the Angels in June, 1988. He played his initial season at Bend (Or.) of the Single-A Northwest League before being promoted to Midland (Texas) of the Double-A Texas League at the beginning of this season.

The Billerica native batted .287 this season to place him amongst the Texas League leaders. After the season ended, Disarcina returned to Amherst and was enrolled for classes at the University when he was contacted by Angels' General Manager Bill Bavasi on Saturday.

Disarcina departed for Anaheim, Calif. yesterday and will spend a few days in reconditioning before joining the team. Bavasi said that he will be the Angels' starting shortstop for the remainder of the season.

Baldacci gets passing grades on first test

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The first term report card is in on quarterback Roger Baldacci, and it appears to be one that he won't have any trouble bringing home to get signed.

The fifth-year senior from Swampscott has stood on the sidelines each of the last four years, watching predecessors Dave Palazzi and Tim Bryant put up some decent numbers. In Saturday's season opener against James Madison University at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, it was Baldacci's turn and he put up some good numbers himself.

Those in attendance might be surprised with what Baldacci accomplished. But the stats will show 20 of 33 passes completed, good for 257 yards and two touchdowns. Only five times in the last four years has a University of Massachusetts quarterback thrown for more yards in a game.

And in the category that really counts — on the scoreboard — 28 points isn't a bad day at the office. Baldacci's outing was good for a spot on the Yankee Conference honor roll.

"He hit some tough balls and he had some tough reads. It was very difficult," UMass coach Jim Reid said. "But don't forget, this was his first game. I thought he ran the offense well."

Baldacci entered the game with a resume that didn't take up too much of the page. In fact, his experience consisted of three snaps late in a blowout win over Rhode Island in 1987. He never got to throw a pass in that game.

For the record, his first collegiate pass was a 10-yarder over the middle to tight end Ron Villone on a third-and-5 play, giving the Minutemen a first down. It came on the first series of the game, one which he drove the team to the 6-yard line before the drive stalled. But he wasn't on the field for that, having been replaced by backup Tom Fasano.

The sophomore had been designated as the short-yardage man, but he wasn't quite as successful as Baldacci. He carried twice for -5 yards rushing.

"They (JMU) were giving us looks that we didn't expect in the goal line, short-yardage situations," Reid said. "We had to stay with the regular offense."

"I knew all along Tommy was going to do it," Baldacci said. "The coaching staff feels that's best for the team."

But as the game wore on, Baldacci was getting the call in the key positions, and he performed admirably.

"I thought I'd be more nervous," Baldacci said. "After the first series I came out and was more relaxed. I was surprised I wasn't as nervous."

He didn't show the pizazz that Palazzi displayed last season en route to being named New England Offensive Player-of-the-Year. But Baldacci stayed poised and got the job done.

"Roger did a great job," said fullback David Mitchell. "It was great how the team hung together and he stayed tough."

"He did a lot of nice things," Reid said. "He came back 13 pounds lighter and was able to run the option. He did a nice job."

Caparotti fills in just fine at cornerback position

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

When Jerome Bledsoe was shifted from cornerback to tailback in preseason, there was question about who would take his spot. After all, you don't replace an All-New England player just like that.

But Saturday some of those doubts were put to rest with the play of redshirt sophomore Don Caparotti. The Damascus, Md. native had never played a down for the Minutemen before taking the field against James Madison University at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Caparotti made his presence known right away, chipping in on five tackles and making three pass deflections. That was good enough to earn him a spot on the Yankee Conference honor roll for the week.

"It feels pretty good," Caparotti said when asked to assess his debut performance. "In spring ball they told me if I could produce, Jerome would go over (to offense)."

The initial consensus was that Bledsoe had impressed the coaches to the point where they could afford to move him to offense. But Caparotti's progress made that decision an easier one to make.

"(The coaches) thought my ability was strong enough," Caparotti said. "My conditioning paid off."

Caparotti shook off the possibility that, being the rookie in the secondary, the Dukes would go after him and test him early.

"I wasn't afraid. I was ready for it," he said.

"We went right at him and he made some nice plays," admitted JMU coach Joe Purzycki.

One in particular was a great pass break-up on a potential touchdown pass from Roger Waters to Leon Taylor. The fleet Taylor was wide open down the left sideline and camped out for the pass, but Caparotti released from coverage and arrived just in time to step in and bat the ball away.

UMass can only hope it won't be the last great play that Don Caparotti makes in his career with the Minutemen.

Keeping their guard up: The Dukes tried to pull a fast one on the Minutemen to produce the winning touchdown in the final quarter. With a third-and-20 from the UMass 39, JMU went to the fumble-rooski play, where the center and quarterback fake the snap and the guard picks it up and runs.

It worked, for a while, with guard Chris Schellhammer legging it untouched around the left side. But Caparotti stepped up and dumped the 6-foot-3, 240-pound lineman after a 13-yard gain.

"He (Caparotti) made an even bigger play on the guard-around," said defensive coordinator Mike Hodges."

Fortunately for the Minutemen, Schellhammer was moving only slightly faster than the Continental Drift, or he may have picked up a key first down in the final two minutes.

Getting his kicks: Marco Gabrielli was ready for the potential game-winning field goal, no matter where his teammates gave him the chance.

"Realistically, I could have hit one from 60," Gabrielli said. "I wanted that last one. I was ready."

The junior from Framingham also took over the punting duties this season, and boomed a 72-yarder that was nullified when UMass accepted a penalty for running into the kicker. Four plays later, he nailed a 58-yarder that counted. He was also 4-for-4 in PATs.

Mix-ups: The Minutemen had two plays that clearly didn't go as planned, one that worked out well in the end and one that didn't.

The first came when quarterback Roger Baldacci misinterpreted a signal from the sidelines and called an end reverse on a first down deep in their own territory.

"Roger missed a number," said UMass coach Jim Reid, "and when they ran the play I yelled 'Oh, God, it's a reverse . . . it's . . . Go! go!" The play, run by flanker Mike Tobin, picked up 17 yards and a first down.

"I just looked up at (offensive coordinator) Bob MacConnell and gave him a thumbs-up," Reid joked.

The other came on the last play of the first half, with JMU setting up for a go-ahead field goal from the 5-yard line. What resulted was a fake field goal and a heartbreaking touchdown from holder Scott Todd to Garrett Washington.

"We only had 10 guys on the field," Reid said. "We'd had so many injuries that someone forgot their assignment. There was a lot of confusion."

Six 'pushy' magazine salesmen banned

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Representatives from a Texas magazine sales company have been banned from the University of Massachusetts campus after several reports that salesmen used aggressive sales tactics and annoying behavior to proffer subscriptions, police said.

Six salesmen from Torq and Associates were cited for trespassing and were banned from campus, according to Deputy Chief of Police John Luippold. The company does not have a vendor's license to sell subscriptions at the University, he said.

According to police reports, the salesmen made potential clients feel uncomfortable and intimidated them on at least four separate occasions since last Wednesday.

Two women reported a magazine salesman bothered them Wednesday in Washington Residence Hall.

Police also received a report Thursday of an annoying magazine salesman. The woman said a silver necklace was stolen from her jewelry box while she was writing a check for a magazine subscription. Police

Regents developing new school incentive program

Student performance basis of funding

By ALLISON J. PUGH
The Associated Press

BOSTON — In an effort to give schools incentives to improve programs and streamline costs, the State Board of Regents is developing a plan to base public funding for schools on student performance, Board Chairman Paul Tsongas said.

"I want the presidents to know if he or she does it right, there will be a pot of gold. And if they stagnate, college X is coming after their hide," said Tsongas.

The plan would determine how approximately 5 percent of the $608 million in state aid to public colleges and universities gets distributed. Under the plan, for example, as much as $2.9 million of the $58 million budget at the University of Massachusetts would be given to the school based on student performance.

How student performance is to be evaluated is still unclear. Regents spokesman Terry Zoulas said Monday, "One of the criteria may be some kind of incoming and graduate testing, but we're still in speculative stages."

Zoulas said a committee made up of the presidents of the state's schools, their fiscal staff and the fiscal staff of the Regents board is working on the proposal. They plan to have it in place by 1992.

Zoulas said the board will try to overcome at least one obstacle to the plan before they put it into effect: Current funding discrepancies of the area's public universities before the plan goes into effect.

The Regents will not be taking money from one school and giving to another when the institutions are starting out uneven, Zoulas said. He said the board was asking for $20 million to distribute to under-funded schools before they put the new funding system into place.

"We first have to level the playing field," he said, noting the disparity between the budgets at the University of Lowell and the University of Massachusetts.

The plan would have schools competing against their near-equals in resources. Thus, Tsongas told the Quincy Patriot Ledger, community colleges, two-year schools and four-year schools would face competition only in their separate categories.

Although the plan would ultimately include all state financed schools, the initial efforts would focus on community colleges, Tsongas said.

The news had at least one community college president waxing defiant.

"We would welcome the challenge to strut our stuff, so to speak," said Massasoit Community College President Gerard Burke.

Other school officials said they were worried about the logistics of the plan.

Geoff Motte, the academic dean for the Massachusetts Maritime Academy at Buzzards Bay, said it would be exceedingly difficult to work out a system that would give the schools an equal chance at the money.

And the chancellor at the University of Massachusetts at Boston, Sherry H. Penney, said testing students might be unfair as the numbers of those who transfer between schools increases.

Pupils don't buy Bush drug speech

Message old to youngsters

By ARLENE LEVINSON
The Associated Press

BOSTON — After listening politely to President Bush remind the country's schoolchildren: "Saying 'no' won't make you a nerd. It won't make you a loser," 10-year-old Amos Dunn shrugged like a skeptical,middle-aged man.

"I don't think what he said is going to stop it. It needs a lot more to stop it," Amos said. The only answer is "not making any more drugs," he concluded.

Amos and the 24 other students in Mrs. Ouida Kalokoh's fifth-grade class at Mattahunt Elementary School in inner-city Boston might have been younger than the audience of middle school and high school students Bush intended to reach.

But Bush's warnings about the deadliness of illicit drugs, the need to be able to resist them, aren't new to these children.

They see it on the streets, and what they learn there often is embellished by what they get from television.

"The White people are supplying it to Black people, who are selling it to Black people. Like on TV," said Larry Bates, 11.

"It makes me feel bad seeing Black people are using it. I'm Black. I'm not going to use it."

"I see that a lot of times on television, that kids do drugs. They do it to be adult,"said 11-year-old Louranda Ross after Bush's address on drugs was seen on television here and in many schools across the country.

"Some parents don't take care of their kids. Because [the parents] are on drugs or something." Such children get into drugs, she said, "because they want to leave their parents. They can make money and show their parents they can do what they want."

Louranda observed, almost more wearily than an 11-year-old should: "It's not going to make no difference. People don't listen."

At age 9 she made friends with a little girl who confided that the friend's mother was doing drugs. The child told Louranda, "I'll be doing drugs too."

Last year, Kalokoh taught fourth-grade to many of these same youngsters. Discussion about drugs is part of her curriculum. But until last year, she didn't know the ingredients in crack cocaine, she said. Her pupils filled her in.

Duffey in D.C. to brief govs. on education

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey is in Washington today to brief the nation's governors on public higher education across the country, preparing them for a "national summit on education" commissioned later this month by President Bush.

The summit, which is the third educational forum in United States history to be called by a president, is scheduled for Sept. 28 and 29 at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Va.

It will include face-to-face discussions between the president and members of the National Association of Governors on the importance and direction of education in the United States.

Duffey has been selected by the Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges to represent the nation's public research Universities on a panel which will meet with the governors and prepare an agenda for the summit.

The chancellor could not be reached yesterday, but Dr. Dennis L. Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, said Duffey will stress the importance of public universities, "and particularly comprehensive ones" with graduate research curricula.

"The biggest concern we have is to make sure public higher education is available to all people," Madson said. "The federal government's role is one where we want to press to get more financial support."

Madson said Duffey was selected by the Association, the

Jenifer: Cuts 'devastating' to higher education

BOSTON (AP) — As a result of budget cuts that limit enrollment, the number of students attending public universities and colleges in Massachusetts decreased in 1988, the first time since 1984 that enrollment levels have declined over previous year levels, the chancellor for higher education announced yesterday.

Franklyn G. Jenifer told the state Board of Regents, in a regular meeting at Bunker Hill Community College, that actual enrollment has dropped at a time when student applications are increasing.

He termed the impact of the State's fiscal crisis and resulting budget reductions on higher education as "devastating."

"Fiscally, public higher education in Massachusetts faces a crisis," said Jenifer in his report. ". . . Lack of consistent and meaningful fiscal support for public higher education has hampered our twin goals of access and quality. We now find ourselves within a 'bare essentials' environment, unable to meet the growing demand for access to our system."

General operating budgets on state college campuses have been cut, on the whole, by $30 million, Jenifer said.

For the 1990 school year, the state Legislature approved $755.2 million for higher education, Gov. Dukakis vetoed $22.1 million and withheld $16.7 million. The total cut was $38.8 million. The final education budget of $716.4 million is a 5 percent reduction from the previous year's appropriation.

As a result, about 9,000 admissible students will be turned away this year. More than 1,100 faculty and professional positions have been frozen and 1,000 course sections cancelled.

Among other cuts this school year:

- The entire $2 million School-College Collaborative program has been eliminated.
- Funds for disadvantaged student programs were cut from $6.6 million to $5.9 million.
- Funds for academic libraries were cut by $500,000.
- The University of Massachusetts Cooperative Extension program was reduced from $4.7 million to $3 million, requiring numerous layoffs.
- State student aid was reduced by $3.8 million.

Last year, state higher education officials laid off administrative personnel and part-time faculty, eliminated almost all but essential equipment purchases and instituted emergency fees to pay for normal maintenance items.

Jenifer said that restoration of funding for campus support should be the focal point in the board's 1991 budget request.

"It is critical to the health of our system that we provide adequate resources for all operational areas that contribute to a quality education.

Lobbyist joins fight against budget cuts

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE

The Graduate Student Senate has added a paid, part-time lobbyist to the Leadership Coalition to help the group fight budget cuts at the Statehouse.

GSS vice president Pierre Laliberte told the senate last night at its first meeting that the lobbyist, a graduate student whose name will be announced at a later date, would be meeting with legislators later in the fall when votes will be taken about the funding of public higher education.

"We want to make sure it's on the agenda," Laliberte said. The lobbyist is scheduled to receive $3,200 per semester, he said.

The Leadership Coalition is a student-run group with represenatatives from the Student Government Association, the Faculty Senate and the GSS.

The person has already been hired, Laliberte said, prompting senator Rob Anderson of the Entomology department to ask why there was no advertisement for the job.

Laliberte said the person had to be hired immediately for training, adding that if he had advertised for the job, the lobbyist would not be ready until November.

The senate also discussed the issue of its possible $29,400 contribution to the Board of Governors. According to Laliberte, the GSS will not give the money until the senate hears from BOG Treasurer Liz Balentine about how the money will be used in programming and space for graduate students.

"We want to know what sort of programming they're sponsoring," Laliberte said. He said he would like to see some shows designed for graduate students, in addition to concerts.

No representatives from the BOG were present at the meeting.

GSS Executive Officer Bruce Tull said the senate should give the most funding to RSOs that have more graduate student involvement, such as the Student Union Art Gallery.

Tull also said the senate still wants to discuss the issue. "We're still willing to renegotiate if they come up to the office," he said.

In other senate news:

- The GSS unanimously voted to establish a social committee to help the senate's Executive Committee find a site for the Graduate Social Center and plan social events for the graduate student community. The site is still being negotiated, according to senate President Catalina Castillon-Dodson.
- Nominations opened for positions on the senate's finance and elections committees. They will remain open until Sept. 26, Castillon-Dodson said.
- Castillon-Dodson announced that the deadline for applications for the child care voucher program is Sept. 15. The program will provide $11,000 in financial assistance next year for University of Massachusetts graduate students with children under the age of five.

Porn mail found

A student in the School of Management reported Monday that someone had tampered with his mail, police said.

The man said he deposited mail in an out-of-state box, and the envelope was returned to him containing a pornographic note, not the contents he originally mailed.

Police said the mail was sent to Temple University in Philadelphia. UMass Deputy Chief of police John Luippold said it appears someone used the envelope to mail something other than the original contents.

University of Massachusetts and Temple University police are investigating the case of mail fraud.

Lockers pilfered

Police responded to two reports of larceny in Boyden Gym Monday, police said.

A student returning to her locker discovered her padlock opened and her property, valued at $100, stolen.

Later that day, a student reported his locker and several others in Boyden were broken into. Nothing was reported missing.

In other police reports:

- Police reported that Charles E. Wilson, 20, of Washington Residence Hall was arrested on charges of being a minor in possession of alcohol Sunday night outside of his dorm, police said.
- A set of master keys was reported stolen Monday from the key box in Johnson Residence Hall, police said.
- A student reported Monday that her car's license plate had been stolen while the car was parked in the Fraternity/Sorority Park parking lot, according to police.

Undergraduate Student Senate proposes mandatory orientation for senators

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

At tonight's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, senators will kick off the semester with a proposal making orientation mandatory for all senators and two motions limiting the number of senators running on a ticket.

Senate Speaker John Dunlap said he is confident the orientation proposal, which is sponsored by 15 Student Government Association officers and senators, will pass.

Dunlap said he hopes the senators' approval of the motion will be an indication of their willingness to be better informed and cooperative.

"It'll show that they're willing to make getting the education they need a priority," said Dunlap.

Student Government Association Attorney General Robert Fadel said in recent years the senator orientation program had been poorly attended.

Dunlap said he expects the motions on co-senatorships to be controversial.

"I'll be surprised if we get to a vote on it," said Dunlap.

The first motion, sponsored by Senator Dan Chesnicka, Wheeler, prevents more than one candidate from holding a seat at the same time. The other motion, sponsored by Fadel, allows no more than two co-candidates.

The present ruling, under Chapter 10 of the SGA bylaws, does not specify a limit to the number of candidates running on a senatorial ticket.

Fadel said his proposal is not a reaction to Chesnicka's, but would ensure a limit on the number of co-senators.

"If his motion passes, I'll remove mine," said Fadel.

Another motion, sponsored by SGA Treasurer Laura Filkins, will review an increase in the full costing charge imposed by the University on the Student Activities Trust Fund.

Filkins said the charge, which is a fee for accounting, personnel and other central University services, increased dramatically and is likely to do so again next year.

"It's something [students] should be concerned with," said Filkins.

SGA Budgets Committee Chairperson Karen Talbot is proposing a motion to form a registration committee to alleviate the burden placed on the SGA registrar by the current restructuring of the Registered Student Organizations.

Talbot said the committee will act as a liaison between the registrar and the RSOs and also will advise the registrar.

ROTC raises $770

The Army Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) annual rope bridge challenge culminated yesterday at the campus pond with a yield of $770 in donations for Easter Seals.

The charitable effort, which ran Wednesday and yesterday, increased the rope challenge's record earnings by more than $400, said ROTC Captain Brian Cashman, who organized the event with Ranger Platoon Sgt. Jeff Loughlin.

"I think that says a lot about the people on this campus," Cashman said. "They're willing to help us work for charity."

Cashman credited the increase to ROTC volunteers' more aggressive recruiting tactics this year, such as using a public address system.

"From the first morning, we could tell it was going to go well over [last year's earnings]," he said.

LBG Collective counsels peers

The Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Men's Counseling Collective held an orientation meeting yesterday as part of a two-week selection process for new counselors.

The collective offers free confidential peer counseling on a drop-in basis to students concerned about their sexual identity, said Felice Yeskel, coordinator of the UMass Program for Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Concerns.

Yeskel said the program is particularly helpful for men who are in the process of acknowledging they are gay.

"People who are coming out have a lot of feelings," said Yeskel. "They need someone who is supportive to talk them out with."

Brad Robinson, a senior who was a counselor last year, said the program is extremely successful as a first step for men entering the gay community on campus.

"It's often the first time ever that [men] talk with a person who says 'I'm gay and it's no big deal,'" said Robinson.

Robinson said the Counseling Collective's location in the Student Union Building, Room 406G, does not intimidate people as much as the more centrally positioned Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance's office, located above the mini-store in the Union.

Yeskel said counselors also facilitate a weekly rap group to address gay concerns.

She said that internship credits are available to counselors. The next orientation is scheduled for 4:30 p.m. Sept. 19 in Room 805-809 in the Campus Center.

Police were called to Lincoln Apartments Saturday and Sylvan Residence Hall at approximately the same time to investigate a report of a magazine salesman treating residents rudely and banging on their doors.

Luippold said there may be other salesmen from Torq Associates working on campus that have not been brought to the attention of police. He said if they receive reports that there are others still around, they will be banned from University property.

CASUAL SEX

There are answers available about STDs, but few students want to ask the questions: Would you want your sex life exposed?

By KERRY HERLIHY
and SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

The literature is available and there are people at the University of Massachusetts prepared to answer questions, but when it comes to sex and sexuality at UMass, more students than not would prefer to keep things quiet.

Alice Rossi, a UMass sociology professor, is one person who has the answers but is awaiting the students' questions.

"It would take a lot of social change for a student to stand up in my class and say, 'Is a blow-job dangerous?'"

According to a 1988 survey by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, the majority (71.4 percent) of students surveyed said they have received information and understand the issues surrounding Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS).

> "On college campuses, indications are things aren't changing."
> – Richard Goldsby, professor of animal and veterinary sciences

The same survey revealed that over half of the students have not changed their sexual behavior since scientists discovered the AIDS epidemic nearly a decade ago.

Students give lip service

Richard Goldsby, a professor of veterinary and animal sciences at UMass, recently authored a book, Thinking AIDS, with Mary Catherine Bates, former dean of faculty at Amherst College.

In looking at how views about sex have changed because of AIDS, Goldsby said people give lip service to safe sex.

"On college campuses, indications are things aren't changing," he said.

Goldsby said there has not been a dramatic decrease of sexually transmitted disease (STD) cases at UMass, and concluded that students have not made the changes necessary to be safe from harm. He said, "It's like paying taxes; it has to be done, but they want someone else to do it."

Several UMass students agreed that students are not careful enough in their sexual practices.

> "It's okay for people to be sexual, act sexual, look sexual. But in our culture, it is not acceptable to talk about sexuality."
> – Gretchen Krull, coordinator of the peer and sexuality program

"I think most students believe that although they may have a good chance of getting an STD, they don't really believe they can get AIDS here at UMass," said Eric Woodman, a UMass senior.

Cases of AIDS have been reported at UMass, said Gretchen Krull, coordinator of the peer sexuality program at the University. Although the number of cases recorded is not public information, Krull said 14 cases have been reported in Hampshire County. In addition, there has been an increase of STDs in the past five years.

"Students are taking things into consideration," Krull said. "But there are lots of people who are not coming to the workshops [on sex education].

Difficult to talk about sex

"It's okay for people to be sexual, act sexual, look sexual," she said. "But in our culture, it is not acceptable to talk about sexuality."

Rossi sided with Krull, saying that Americans do not talk about sex easily.

"There is much less sexual prudery in other cultures," she said.

This prudery leads people to separate themselves from diseases such as AIDS, said Mike Henry, a UMass graduate student.

"People tend to identify certain diseases with certain types of people, which is an unfair and medieval type of thinking," he said.

AIDS increases awareness

Goldsby said AIDS may have increased students' awareness and acceptance of people with different sexual mores.

"In the past, lesbians, bisexuals, and gays have been ignored or tabooed," he said. "AIDS has forced us to realize that we're all people, and we all have to deal with it."

> "People are afraid their curiosities will hurt them. Like if they know someone who's gay, they'll become gay too."
> – Hope Moore, former LBGA representative to the Board of Governors

Max Mitchell, co-president of the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance, said UMass students are more aware of homosexuality and bisexuality, but that more needs to be done to educate students to stop homophobia.

Mitchell said it is difficult to reach students because "the people who need the most education are the ones who don't want the education."

Hope Moore, former LBGA representative to the Board of Governors, said people avoid educating themselves because of their fears.

"People are afraid their curiosities will hurt them," she said. "Like if they know someone who's gay, they'll become gay too."

Rossi said she agrees that many people are afraid to learn about groups such as lesbian, bisexual, and gay students, and that they view AIDS as God's revenge on certain groups.

> "If AIDS becomes even more of an epidemic than it is now, I think students' views will change."
> – Tina Abraham, UMass junior

But, "the media has done a good job to communicate that there is a whole variety of people being affected, not just lesbians, gays and drug users," she said.

Students discuss future

In the future, students see their views on sexuality changing only with the barometer of AIDS.

UMass junior Tina Abraham said, "If AIDS becomes even more of an epidemic than it is now, I think students' views will change. If it stays at the level that it is, then people are going to just accept it, like a disease such as cancer."

UMass graduate student Sara Betz said, "If there are a lot of heterosexual, 'normal people' that are admitted into the hospitals in the next few years, there may be change. But I think it will take something that drastic."

Abraham added half-jokingly, "[If] they find a cure for it like oat bran or something, then everyone will just go out and eat oat bran and not worry about it."

E. German media decries emigration

Whether exodus to Hungary will continue now unclear

BERLIN (AP) — East German media yesterday denounced as high-level provocation a deal between Bonn and Budapest to let East Germans go West. There were indications East Berlin had begun clamping down on trips to Hungary.

Moscow sent a hard-line Politburo member to East Germany, apparently for talks about Hungary's action.

More than 10,000 East Germans who were vacationing in Hungary have fled to the West since late Sunday.

East German newspapers devoted large amounts of space to the exodus and portrayed the flood of refugees as an unjustified act caused by West Germany with the assistance of Hungary.

Neues Deutschland, the Communist Party's official newspaper, ran a report from a refugee camp at Passau, West Germany. It called the exodus a "provocation organized at high levels," and an "illegal action to lure away East German citizens in Hungary."

The Communist party youth newspaper Junge Welt called the exodus an "anti-socialist action . . . by Bonn" and also expressed "disappointment" over Hungary's decisiion to let it happen.

Sources told the Associated Press that police offices responsible for processing applications for tourist visas are filled nearly every day with East Germans eager to go to Hungary, ostensibly for vacation. But many more are seeing those requests turned down, they said.

No official figures are available on the number of East Germans waiting for a judgment on their visa applications.

Some unofficial estimates put the number of East Germans who desire to emigrate to the West at 1 million.

News of the exodus of East Germans to the West provoked bitter cynicism among some who remained in their Communist homeland.

"The officials are soon going to introduce a new holiday just for us who stayed. The Day of Those Left Behind," said an East Berlin construction worker, who would not give his name.

Soviet Politburo hard-liner Yegor Ligachev arrived in East Berlin on Tuesday, the state-run ADN news agency said.

ADN said only the Ligachev would be meeting with East German officials to discuss "policies of the [Warsaw Pact] alliance." It was expected Ligachev and the East Germans would be discussing Hungary's role in the refugee affair.

The East Germans arriving in the West say the news reports have said Honecker may be dying, but government sources deny that.

Yeltsin discusses reform with Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet political maverick Boris N. Yeltsin met briefly with President Bush yesterday and urged the administration and U.S. business executives to help salvage the political and economic reforms being pushed by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Bush "emphasized that the American people share his hope for the success of the reform movement in the Soviet Union," the White House said in a short statement after the 15-minute meeting.

Bush told Yeltsin his administration enjoys a "very positive relationship" with Gorbachev and reiterated support for perestroika, or the restructuring of Soviet economic and political life, the White House said.

After meeting for nearly an hour with Secretary of State James A. Baker III, Yeltsin said he did not expect the United States to loan money to the Kremlin, but that he wanted American companies to invest in the Soviet Union.

Jury not yet picked for drug lord trial

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Jury selection plodded along in the so-called "Son of Lehder" cocaine conspiracy trial yesterday with the judge questioning potential jurors about their knowledge of Columbian drug lord Carlos Lehder Rivas and his trial here last year.

The process of selecting a jury to hear the case of five Americans accused of helping Lehder create one of the first large-scale smuggling rings in the early 70s slowed when more than 30 jurors indicated to U.S. District Judge John J. Moore II that they had heard of the Columbian in media reports.

Moore then began calling prospects into the court one at a time to question them about their knowledge of Lehder's 7 1/2-month-long trial, its outcome and whether it would bias them about this case's defendants, who are accused of conspiring with Lehder and others to distribute cocaine in the United States, starting in 1974.

Japanese Orchestra called 'phenomenal'

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — An orchestra made up of musicians trained by legendary Japanese music teacher Hideo Saito and led by Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor Seiji Ozawa is reaping accolades in Europe.

The 54-year-old Ozawa is touring with the Saito Kinen Orchestra, made up of former pupils of Saito, who died in 1974. All but three of the approximately 90 orchestra members are Japanese.

"Last night we played in Vienna at the Konzerthaus, and it was just phenomenal," spokeswoman Kim Smedvig said yesterday.

"Leonard Bernstein came as a member of the audience, because, of course, Ozawa studied with him many years ago, and [Bernstein] said it was one of the most phenomenal orchestras he's ever heard," Smedvig told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

Polish non-Communist cabinet approved

Soviets 'prepared to cooperate with that government'

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lawmakers yesterday approved the Soviet bloc's first government led by non-Communists after prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki urged them to change virtually every aspect of Polish life.

The vote was 402 in favor of Mazowiecki's Cabinet, none against and 13 abstentions.

Mazowiecki, smiling, lifted his hands in the 'V' for victory sign that for so long represented illegal opposition to the Communist government. The parliament rose to applaud.

The names of the new Cabinet ministers were read, with the loudest ovation going to Jacek Kuron, the new labor minister who spent nine years in prison for his opposition activism.

In Moscow, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov said of the new government: "We are prepared to cooperate with that government and develop our relations with Poland."

Mazowiecki, a Solidarity editor who last month became the East bloc's first non-Communist prime minister in more than four decades, promised in a speech before the vote that his government would overhaul all institutions previously controlled by the Communists.

He said the country's economic crisis was swelling the ranks of the poor and called for immediate action against the triple-digit inflation, including Western tax reform, making the zloty convertible with Western currency and creating a stock exchange.

"The new government will act under the pressure that at any moment the construction of democracy that only just started can collapse under the economic crisis," he said.

He also outlined plans for putting the security apparatus and the judiciary under what he termed "social control" — even though the Communist incumbent was nominated to continue as head of the ministry overseeing them.

Ethics panel to investigate Frank sex case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House ethics committee voted yesterday to conduct a preliminary investigation of Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., who has acknowledged employing a male prostitute as a personal aide after initially hiring him for sex.

Although Frank had formally sought the investigation, the committee chairman, Rep. Julian Dixon, D-Calif., told reporters the decision "was not based on his request" but on the panel's own initiative.

Frank welcomed the action, saying the matter "is now before the proper forum" and promising to "cooperate fully with the committee as it proceeds with its deliberations."

Dixon also announced that the committee accepted the request of one of its members, Rep. Chester Atkins, D-Mass., to withdraw from consideration of the Frank case.

"Mr. Atkins felt in this particular case he could not be a fair and impartial person," Dixon said, adding that another Democratic member would be named to sit on the Frank case while Atkins planned to remain active in other committee investigations.

In a statement, Atkins said, "Barney Frank is my friend. I cannot end our friendship today, and I cannot be sure that my judgement of this friend would be 'impartial and unbiased' as the House rules require. The public has a right to expect of us no outright predisposition."

Atkins also said his dual role as a panel member and Massachusetts' Democratic chairman "would, at the outset, serve to undermine the committee's standing. If I remain on the . . . committee, for this case, I compromise the process. If I excuse myself, I do much more to uphold the credibility of the process."

Dixon said the investigation was prompted by "the assertions surrounding Barney Frank's employment of Mr. Steve Gobie."

Frank, a leading congressional liberal and acknowledged homosexual, has admitted hiring Gobie, initially for

DEANS LIST SPRING SEMESTER 1989

Congratulations to those who qualified for the Deans List. Your noteworthy academic performance is a source of pride to the faculty, staff, and your student collegues, as well as to your parents I'm sure. Such outstanding academic achievement (3.5 or higher semester average with twelve or more graded credits) is attained by fewer than 15% of our undergraduates. Providing opportunities for academic growth is one of the University's highest priorities and it is especially pleasing, therefore, to note and reward such accomplishment. Thank you for the credit you bring to the University.

Joseph Duffey, Chancellor

PRESS RELEASES

To publicize your achievement, the University News Office will be issuing a press release to your hometown newspaper if you are a Massachusetts resident. Out of state students who qualified for the Deans List are asked to pick up a press release form at 200 Munson Hall (second floor).

ADDITIONS

The Deans List was based on grades received and posted by the Registrar's Office as of July 24, 1989. If you had a grade change after that date, and believe you now qualify, please fill out a form available at the Information Data Bank, 227 Whitmore, and attach verification. You will be contacted with confirmation. (Reminder: only graded credits are used in calculating the Deans List.)

The Deans List is prepared and paid for each semester by Student Affairs Information Services as a service to the campus community.

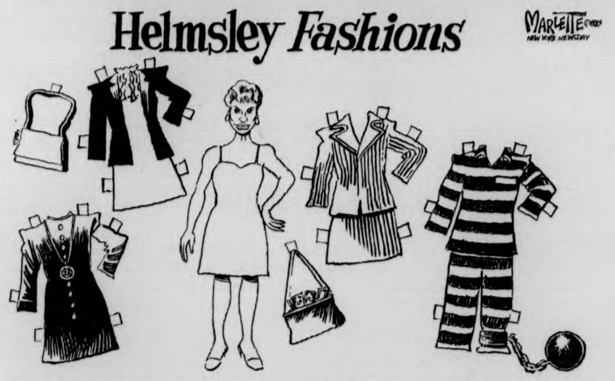
EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted



Spin the education wheel

It is seven days into the semester and I have perfect attendance in all of the classes I am not enrolled in.

I have rarely attended the two classes the University generously offered me this summer because I have been too busy waving tickets for a class, any class, in front of the history department or entering a lottery to enter a Spanish class.

Maria Sacchetti

The odds were about 10 people to one space.

No luck.

Last semester, it took two weeks of mustering an extreme and exaggerated interest in marine wildlife to enter an Oceanography course. When they called my name, members in the class shook my hand and patted me on the back. Another triumph for student-kind.

An idea struck me yesterday as I was writing my name on a shred of notebook paper, preparing to drop it into a baseball cap in an effort to enter Spanish 311. I was in a no-win situation — about 10 people vying for one space, one desk, one semester's learning.

I walked across the room and matter-of-factly dropped the paper into a cap, as if the entire process was so terribly normal.

Normal? I have a feeling this does not happen at Harvard or Yale.

It is not normal to gamble with your education. I felt like I was playing Blackjack in an Atlantic City casino instead of in Herter 106.

Students are angry and the sympathetic faces of instructors are wearing thin.

To secure a space in a class at the University of Massachusetts is indeed cause for celebration.

It is true, instructors are underpaid, overworked, and occasionally mistreated. Students understand this and can often empathize.

Most professors I have spoken with are wonderful. They understand and actually work to help you enter a class, based on merit, not luck.

As an instructor said yesterday as she enrolled the "winner" of the sole space in Spanish 311: "What can I do?"

What we can do is refuse to get lost in the shuffle. We can refuse to let our education wait until we are registered seniors and therefore eligible for a class. Be persistent, demanding, and annoying if necessary, but at least be there and show the University you are here for an education, not the standard runaround.

Some people have told me that this situation is a good example of real life. But as each day progresses and I lose ground in half of my classes because I am working desperately to acquire the other half, I have another thought.

It seems more the death of education than an illustration of real life.

Ten years from now, when I receive a call from University telefund workers requesting my contribution for the betterment of education, I will not know whether to laugh or cry. . .

Or hang up and put this nightmare behind me.

But I certainly will not give to something that has done little more than take away.

Maria Sacchetti is a Collegian staff member

How would you define a "Drug War?" Do you believe in the legalization of marijuana, cocaine or other drugs? What determines if a drug should be available to the general public?

Over $8 billion of our tax dollars may be appropriated to fight the Drug War if President Bush gets his way. But can the United States really fight against a substance with weapons?

Do you have any answers? Submit your column or letter regarding this drug "problem" by Thursday, September 15 for Friday's "Point/Counterpoint" section.

Take a stand. Your point of view is worth reading.

To shave or not to shave

During high school, when it was still fun to drink beer because it was "illegal" to do so, I avoided the under-age issue at the liquor store with a simple disguise. My costume consisted of a bright red Hawaiian shirt and three days without a shave. I looked just like one of the "regulars."

Darren Garnick

Since then, my ability to grow a beard has not reaped any other benefits. Only hassles.

For the enlightenment of the beardless sex, I thought it might be educational to document those hassles. Because I steadfastly refuse to use shaving cream or any other gooey product, my experiences are more painful than most.

Every guy must choose between razor blades or electric shavers. Scrape or Sandpaper? But regardless of how he carves out his cheeks, there is one absolute guarantee — he WILL bleed.

Help for wounded male faces is in this month's issue of Gentlemen's Quarterly (GQ) magazine. GQ offers "disaster tips" for dealing with tragic shaving situations. According to the publication, the best substance to use in the event of a shaving cream famine is hair conditioner. No suggestions are offered in the event of a razor blade shortage, but I thought of the ideal replacement — steak knives.

If a guy accidentally cuts himself scraping hair conditioner off his face, GQ recommends using an "asyptic liquid." It stops the bleeding quickly and better yet, it won't stain clothing!

The blood, however, will. But hemoglobin stains are my last concern. Not shaving invites image problems. Skipping a day or two is okay, but after that the scruffle looks like dirt. Noble attempts have been made to promote this look. However, beard stubble does not remind me of Don Johnson or George Michael. I think of scum.

I think of Yasser Arafat.

Sometimes laziness overrides the importance of a clean cut image. Women who choose the smooth leg image can get away without shaving for a few days by wearing nylons. Guys do not have this luxury. If a man slips panty hose over his face to conceal beard stubble, his motives are immediately questioned.

Men are trapped. Socialized to believe shaving is a legitimate daily ritual, they are helpless consumers. Hoping to enslave other cultures, the shaving industry is constantly expanding. Gillette, one of the leading manufacturers of skin-slicing goods, has operations in Pakistan, Turkey, China, and (soon to be negotiated) the Soviet Union.

"We have the potential," Gillette executive John W. Symons told the The Boston Globe, "of being the greatest male toiletry business in the world. Take the bathroom situation. Think of the products men use in there. That's going to be Gillete territory."

Imperialists. Once they conquer China and the Soviet Union, they will have their greedy eyes on my bathroom.

Of course, there will be fierce competition on the pages of GQ. The most bizarre threat to Gillette thus far has been Lancome, a Paris-based cosmetics firm. Lancome has aimed its new product, Baume Anti-Feu du Rasoir, at an elitist market — men who believe that bleeding is more cultured if it is done while speaking French. Translation: "Immediate Razor Burn Soother."

If the use of razors on human flesh ceased, there would be no burns and no need for a razor burn soother. Maybe it would be best to socialize men to get rid of facial hair altogether. At age 16, beards could be permanently removed with hot wax or lazers. The practice would eliminate years of senseless bloodshed.

PSYCHIATRIC
YOU THINK JIM BAKKER REALLY IS INSANE? ....WHERE'S YOUR PROOF?
HE MARRIED TAMMY FAYE!....

Intellectually stimulating news, or plain gossip?

I turned on the news the other night, expecting glorious enlightenment on current world events and today's political imbroglios with a couple local murders or a clip of President Bush jogging.

I admit, with just a twinge of shame, that I don't watch the news as much as I should. I don't even know where Libya is (tsk, tsk).

Thus, I tuned into the news the other night, hoping to further my knowledge of the global issues that will define this era in time, that will be recorded in the history books for the children of our future to study.

"Coming up, the latest on the Leona Helmsley trials, and live scenes from the courtroom as Jimmy Bakker suffers a mental breakdown," the broadcast gushes with a saccharine grin as the picture-prefect Queen Helmsley poses for her public on the court stairs, all smiles and made-to-order Yves St. Laurent.

Then I sat through Jim and Tammy (eyelashes crawling frantically away as the tears dripped so realistically down her plaster-of-Paris complexion). Next, a news flash on Pete Rose's abdication from baseball.

What is this? This is the news, this isn't "America's Most Wanted," or "Crime Story" (two darn good realistic shows on the ultimate dregs of societies).

I never found out where Libya was, what was going on down there or the latest on the Gaza Strip. Or China. Or Perestroika.

And I never had more fun watching the news.

Why do you think I never watch the news anyway? It's boring!

It's depressing! And, let's face it, watching commentaries on political policy can get a little mundane.

Julie Kotsifas

The real-life is on "Days of Our Lives." Here is scandal as you've never seen it before, the sludge-covered lowdown of the Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous. Believe me folks, it ain't pretty.

Where else but the 6 o'clock news could you see the William Hurt Sandra-Jennings Does Living Together For A Couple of Years and Having a Kid Equal Marriage trial.

Where else could you see Zsa Zsa Gabor's fans wearing t-shirts with her "Thank you, dahling" face behind bars plastered on the front?

Where else could you see Jimmy Bakker break down on camera, pale-faced and shaking uncontrollably as escorts lead him gently from the courtroom?

This is life at its best, folks

And you love it. America loves it.

Just how many of you tuned in to Bush's presidential "War on drugs speech"?

Anyone?

Our eyes are glued to the tube when Rob Lowe's on, trying to convince us he's an ethical person.

We love to see our idols, the success stories, the covers of Kellogg Corn Flakes, screw up. We love to see them do the stupid, tacky things everyone else on the planet does.

Maybe it's not fair that Elizabeth Taylor's road to blimpdom is chronicled on the covers of The National Enquirer while average Jane Doe shoves Fanny Farmer's candy blissfully down her throat with discreet anonymity.

That, my friends, is the price of fame.

I think at heart we're all tasteless gossip-mongers always eager to see someone else err in their ways. And if they just happen to be Zsa Zsa Gabor, hey, all the better!

Any schmuck can shoplift, but when it's former Miss America Bess Myerson, we want to know about it.

So tune in to the 11 o'clock news tonight. Someone famous is bound to take the quadruple somersault from grace. And maybe you'll even hear a bit of the news, too.

Duke: Some towns to be spared in future budgets

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Dukakis told a gathering of municipal officials he would try to spare cities and towns as he makes additional cuts to balance the state's budget.

"We will try not to come at you again," Dukakis told the Local Government Advisory Committee, chaired by Peabody Mayor Peter Torigian.

Dukakis has cut more than $200 million from aid to cities and towns in his efforts to keep the state budget in the black.

The cuts already have resulted in layoffs of police officers, firefighters and teachers, municipal officials said.

Dukakis said the savings package he plans to propose to the Legislature next week will contain provisions aimed at aiding cities and towns, not further cuts that would hurt them.

That package, still in the works, aims at reducing spending and raising money to take care of an estimated $170 million shortfall in state tax collections for the bookkeeeping year that began July 1.

Revenue Commissioner Stephen Kidder told the municipal officials to expect several years of lower growth in state tax collections.

"It does not appear we will get any windfall on the revenue side to bail us out," Kidder said. "Two months into the fiscal year, we are in a negative growth rate in the sales tax."

Kidder predicted revenue would grow about 5 percent this year and 6 percent next year, compared to double-digit rates in the past several years.

Grafton Town Manager Dan Morgado told the governor that municipal officials must send out tax bills and just can't handle any further cuts in state aid.

"We can't do any more. We've got to get our tax bills in the mail. It's like the tax year that will not end. Enough is enough,

We have got to end it." Morgado said.

Torigian told the governor a Massachusetts Municipal Association ballot initiative to guarantee cities and towns a share of state revenue was not meant as an attack on him or other state officials.

"It's almost a last resort type of thing for us," he said. Several municipal officials said their options are limited because of a property tax-limitation plan, Proposition 2 1/2, passed by the state's voters in 1980.

The municipal officials also presented the governor with a cost-savings package they said could result in an additional $145 million for municipalities.

Among its provisions would be granting municipalities authority to pay a fixed percentage of the cost of employee health insurance, instead of a fixed dollar amount. Now, the local officials said, the plan results in some employees getting "free" health insurance by joining health maintenance organizations, while other workers are paying part of their premiums because they chose traditional health insurance instead.

Another provision would prohibit spouses working for the same municipality to have separate health insurance policies.

The officials also asked Dukakis to support measures to give them a bigger chunk of state lottery ticket sale profits and to endorse an increase in fees they can collect from cable television franchises.

New Bedford Mayor John Bullock also asked the governor to consult with local officials before finishing up the state's $925 million capital budget that pays for construction costs and other long-term projects.

Dinkins defeats Koch
May be 1st Black N.Y. mayor

NEW YORK (AP) — Manhattan Borough President David Dinkins toppled three-term Mayor Edward I. Koch in a Democratic primary Tuesday, taking his first step toward becoming the first Black mayor of America's largest city.

In the Republican race, former federal prosecutor Rudolph Giuliani overwhelmed cosmetics heir Ronald Lauder.

With 85 percent of 5,244 precincts reporting, Dinkins had 411,853 votes, or 47 percent, to 394,350, or 45 percent, for Koch, who lost his bid for an unprecedented fourth term.

"He won the race, and he won it fairly, squarely," Koch said in his concession speech shortly after 11:15 p.m.

The other two Democratic candidates, former transit chief Richard Ravitch and Comptroller Harrison Goldin, trailed far behind with 39,957 votes, or 5 percent, and 24,581 votes, or 3 percent, respectively.

Three television stations, citing exit polls, had projected Dinkins would win. WCBS-TV said Dinkins was winning 97 percent of the Black vote and as much as 33 percent of the White vote.

Giuliani had 67,452 votes, or 67 percent, to 33,149, or 33 percent, for Lauder.

ARTS & LIVING

Parenthood is fall's new movie refreshment

GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Correspondent

Like Rob Reiner, Ron Howard is a director who excels at making films that tell stories about people. While Reiner's films like Stand By Me, Sure Thing, and When Harry Met Sally, deal more with the pains and struggles between friends, Howard deals with the joy and sorrow of youth and aging, and the bonds of family life (which he explored in 1985's Cocoon).

THE SCREENING ROOM

Parenthood is an examination of an extended family of four generations that is trying to keep itself intact, despite an apparent lack of communication and understanding. Steve Martin, in what is an Oscar worthy performance, excels as a middle aged family man, trying to make up for his own childhood feelings of parental neglect, by playing "superdad" to his emotionally troubled son. Martin controls his "wild n' crazy guy" persona, and brings a fresh sense of maturity and sympathy to his character, while maintaining a look of childhood innocence as a father searching for his own father figure.

Martin's performance, and Howard's gentle, understanding treatment of the script (written by Lowell Ganz and Babaloo Mandel) make Parenthood the most easily enjoyable and refreshing film of the year. The ensemble cast is superb, with exceptional performances from Jason Robards, Diane Wiest, Martha Plimpton, and Leaf Phoenix. It's almost impossible to find something unlikeable about this humorous and touching film that is the most welcome celebration of family since John Boorman's Hope and Glory.

Relentless is yet another Hollywood re-hashing of John Carpenter's 1978 masterpiece, Halloween, as serial killer Buck Taylor takes his frustrations out on the citizens of Sunset Boulevard. Director William Lustig offers nothing new in this extremely predictable and plodding would-be thriller starring that great thespian actor Judd Nelson. Nelson playing a serial killer is like a basset hound playing a rottwieler. Instead of using his innocent features to his advantage and creating what could've been a genuinely threatening character, Nelson plods around with a dumb grin on his face and saying stupid things like, "My father called me sick once.", before wasting his victims.

The supporting cast doesn't offer much relief either. Veteran character actor Robert Loggia's detective fumbles around looking lost and uninterested, but hangs around long enough to be killed off. Leo Rossi, one of the rapists in The Accused, tries too hard in his first good-guy role as Loggia's new partner, but his smug grin and cocky demeanor contradict his character — a supposed honest cop and family man.

At times, the film does manage to generate some moments of tension, but the script is full of too many holes and loose ends that throw the story off track, and lead to an all too predictable and unsatisfying conclusion.

With the summertime of blockbusters officially over, the first of Hollywood's fall lineup comes into town on Friday. Al Pacino returns to screen after 1985's disasterous Revolution, in Harold Becker's Sea of Love. Pacino plays a New York cop (I'm getting sick of movies about "tough New York cops"), who goes undercover into the world of singles bars to track down Ellen Barkin's serial killer. The film looks suspiciously like a Fatal Attraction rip-off, but I'll try to hold-off judgement until I've seen it. For Pacino's sake, I hope it's a good movie. Al hasn't put out a good film since William Friedkin's deeply disturbing 1979 film, Crusing.

Susan Seidelman's mob comedy, Cookie, is also scheduled to open up this week. The film stars Emily ("up your bum") Lloyd, the freewheeling teen from Wish You Were Here, as the streetwise, gum-chewing daughter of Peter Falk's wife. Cookie is already drawing comparison's to Jonathan Demme's Married to the Mob and John Huston's Prizzi's Honor.

Robyn Hitchcock.

U.P.C. announces Robyn Hitchcock P.I.L. and Flesh

The Union Program Council (UPC) has announced that Robyn Hitchcock and P.I.L. will be appearing at UMass on separate shows this semester.

Robyn Hitchcock, a thirty-six year-old London native who claims to to be made entirely of dead sea creatures, will be performing without his band, the Egyptians. Hitchcock is a former member of the Soft Boys, and has scored underground hits with his songs "Balloon Man" off the Globe of Frogs album, and "One Long Pair of Eyes" off his most recent album, Queen Elvis. He is fresh off of opening for REM on their Green tour, and will be at the Bluewall on September 23 with an as yet unidentified opening act. Tickets will be $8 for UMass students and $11 for the general public.

P.I.L. (Public Image Limited) is coming in fresh off their Monsters of Alternative Rock tour from the summer, in which they appeared with the Sugarcubes and New Order. Fronted by the outspoken former Sex Pistol, John Lydon, (a.k.a. Johnny Rotten) the band is currently enjoying the success of their most recent album, 9, which yielded them the club hits "Happy?" and "Disappointed." With his orange hair and flourescent clothes, Lydon is surely a sight to be seen.

Flesh For Lulu, whose song "Postcards From Paradise" can be heard on the Some Kind of Wonderful soundtrack, will be opening the P.I.L. show, which will take place on October 14 at the Fine Arts Center. Tickets will be $11 for UMass students and $8 for the general public.

Tickets for both shows may be purchased at Tix Unlimited, For the Record in Amherst, and Main St. Records in Northampton.

The Call play disengaged set at Pearl St.

The Call
Pearl Street
Monday, September 11

There are things in life that end too soon. Monday night at Pearl Street, the Call was one of those things.

Maybe it was because there was a sparse audience of about 100 people who could not absorb the sound, or maybe it was because the band just played too damn loud. But whatever the case, police forced the band to shutdown early. The Call played only a twelve song, one hour set, and were forced to scrap many songs, mostly from their brilliant new album Let the Day Begin, from their original set list.

Paying homage to Johnny Cash in their all black attire, the band started off fine enough with the driving "Surrender", which is off the new album, and hit an early peak with "I Don't Wanna", the quasi-hit off their Into the Woods album. Michael Been's voice, as deep as Springsteen's but without the phlegm, was in fine form.

But then things just kind of dragged. Tom Ferrier whipped off some great guitar solos, but they couldn't overcome Been's lack of enthusiasm. He looked like he would rather have been some place else. Been's speaking between songs was confined to hurried "thank you's". Although the Call is technically superior to most bands, their stage presence was so diminished it's hard to believe that Peter Gabriel called them, "The band of the nineties."

Then the hits started coming, the crowd started dancing, and the band began to rock. Been just closed his eyes and went off into his own world on his fantastic bass solo in "I Still Believe." They went right into "Let the Day Begin", their recent number one album-orientated rock hit. The sound was great and the energy was high.

Even in the encore, when Been's magnificent voice was virtually drowned out, the Call brought the crowd up to a frenzy with their classic hits, "Everywhere I Go" and "The Walls Came Down". But they walked off-stage just as the crowd was getting warmed up. Thank you, oh noble police.

The Peregrins, a three man/ two woman band with a gypsy-like appearance, opened the show performing their blend of pop songs reminiscent of Lone Justice, and Katrina and the Waves. Their set included such songs as "True Believers," "Innocent Eyes," and their latest single "Let it Go."

Three albums from women

Old Wives Tales

There is little doubt that women are once again being taken seriously as musicians. Talentless sex tools like Samantha Fox will probably always exist. But at least now a woman only has to be talented, not beautiful, to get a record contract.

Former Golden Palamino, Syd Straw, can attest to that. What this woman lacks in looks, she more than makes up for in her pipes. The disappointment with the spotty Surprise, is that she doesn't use her wonderful voice to its capacity.

RECORD REVIEW

Songs like "Almost Magic", "Crazy American" and "The Unanswered Question?" just lie there, containing no emotion. They're nice enough songs, but they're also boring.

Even on songs that have a bit of an edge to them, such as "Think Too Hard", "Racing To the Ruins" and "Heart of Darkness", Straw's voice isn't equal to the material, and she comes off like a wimpy Bonnie Raitt.

But there are moments when Straw rips off the restraints and lets her beautiful voice, and her emotions, flow out like a rushing waterfall. It is these moments that make the album worth listening to.

Straw angrily spits out, "The judge was a jerk and the jury was just 12 men in search of a fight," on the amusing "Sphinx." Her sarcasm throughout the song is wonderful and her emotions are true.

The same can be said for the beautiful "Chasing Vapors' Trails" and "Future 40's (String of Pearls)," which was co-written and co-sung by REM's Michael Stipe. The songs are brilliant but also disappointing in that you wonder why the rest of the album can't be this good.

The only thing you'll wonder about when you hear A.C. Marias' One of Our Girls Has Gone Missing album, is how this woman got a record contract.

This album should be called Music to Slit Your Wrists By, as every cut is full of melodramatic, droning music that sounds like the Throwing Muses on valium. Marias actually makes the Muses sound like a happy band by comparison.

Holy new artform from Batman to Rockets

By SCOTT HYMAN
Collegian Correspondent

For those of you who feel Batman is truly depicted in Frank Miller's The Dark Knight Returns, and view the Joker more like Alan Moore's The Killing Joke than Cesar Romero, this column is for you. For those of you who consider Love and Rockets more than an alternative rock band, associate the Amazing Spider-Man with more than a Saturday morning cartoon and think of an ardvark rather than a brain at the mentioning of Cerebrus, this column is for you. If the names John Byrne, Jaime Hernandez, Alan Moore, George Perez, Bill Sienkiewicz and Howard Chaykin sound familiar, keep reading. If you associate comics with "Biff!", "Zowie!", and "Pow!", turn to the sports page.

John Byrne, known for his work on X-Men and Fantastic Four and the revamping of Superman, has left the She-Hulk after issue eight. The Comic Buyer's Guide reports differences with editor Bobbie Chase.

The newest company to hit the direct-sales market is Innovation, and they are definitely worth checking out. Most notable are the upcoming 12-issue adaptation of Anne Rice's The Vampire Lestat and Cyberpunk, borrowing heavily from William Gibson's Neuromancer. And speaking of which. . .

Check out Epic Comic's Neuromancer graphic novel, adapted from the above. Although the art leaves something to be desired, it closely follows Gibson's Hugo and Nebula award winning work.

Almost at completion, and definitely worth a look, is Howard Chaykin's perverted tale of porn, prostitution and transvestites, Black Kiss. Though the story can be a bit disgusting, the art is some of the best black and white work produced in quite a while.

Starting with Spectacular Spider-Man –159, Spidey will become the most powerful character in the Marvel Universe. This results from a fusion with Captain Universe, one of Marvel's cosmic characters tossed around to make their main titles interesting.

After becoming a throw-away book for quite some time, Fantastic Four will again be of interest. Handling writing and art chores will be Walt Simonson, known for his work with Batman, Thor, and X-Factor.

Batman is dead, long live Robin. In a Lonely Place of Dying, a five part limited series crossing between Batman and The New Titans, a new character is entered into the Batman mythos. Either as a new side-kick or in the traditional Robin costume, the young Timmy character from Batman: Year Three tracks down Bruce Wayne and Dick Grayson to work at Batman's side. The big picture on this one is probably to gain comic-reader support on the entry of Robin in Batman II.

B52's new album , 'Cosmic Thing' will rock your lobster

Cosmic Thing
The B52's
Reprise Records

"Come on and bring your juke box money," sings Fred Schneider in the song "Love Shack." The latest album from the B-52's is danceable, energetic, and fun. The B-52's show that they are more than just a synthesized new wave pop group, but are, in fact, very talented musicians.

RECORD REVIEW

"Follow Your Bliss," an instrumental, blends guitar and keyboard to create a relaxing melodic song. On the other hand, the title track "Cosmic Thing" is a bouncy, energetic dance song about cosmic beings "shakin' their alien things". Clearly, they've certainly come a long way since their self-titled debut album and Planet Claire.

"Deadbeat Club" and "Dry County" are two of the many songs where the band's vocalists, Cindy Wilson and Kate Pierson, deliver wonderful vocal harmonies, but Fred Schneider sometimes seems to interrupt with his speaking approach to singing. "Deadbeat Club" is about the joys of being a deadbeat and doing things such as crashing parties in "Normaltown", and not having a job. Here, Keith Strickland demonstrates himself as a talented guitar player.

The pop song "Love Shack" is a fun song, and it gives the feeling of a live night club performance, but the implied promiscuity in the lyrics is surprising after former band member Keith Wilson's death from AIDS three years ago.

"Junebug" incorporates nice jungle and nature sound effects, and the shared vocals add more variety to the music. "Roam" and "Bushfire" are the weaker tracks on the album. Cindy Wilson's "back of the throat" vocals manage to save "Roam," but unfortunately, there is no helping "Bushfire"—Fred Schneider's vocals almost seem lost.

"Channel Z" takes a look at the environment and attacks government attitudes toward ecology. Here, the B-52's show that they are not only capable of great music, but also of intelligent lyrics.

"Topaz" is a more optimistic song with more great vocal harmony by Wilson and Pierson, and when they sing the lyric "clear plant blue and green", it seems as if the song is the answer to "Channel Z."

Overall, Cosmic Thing is a very good album. The B-52's prove that they can be technical without being mechanical, unlike so many of today's new wave bands. Cindy Wilson and Kate Pierson display excellent vocal talent, and Keith Strickland also presents himself as a very talented guitar player. The B-52's have come a long way as musicians since their first hit "Rock Lobster", but still sound just as fun.

All of the songs sound alike and are filled with horribly overdramatic poetry that we all used to write in junior high school when we were depressed and tried to sound deep. Maybe if I was depressed, I'd think "Oh to sleep between my dreams/And live before my past." was a brilliant line. But I guess I'm a happy guy because I think it's just angst-filled drivel.

Marias, under the name Angela Conway, has built quite a reputation for herself creating and directing videos, most notably, Wire's "Eardrum Buzz." Her videos are tantalizing and tasty, but she should leave the singing and songwriting to someone else.

I could hear the moans and groans of X fans everywhere when they found out that guitarist Tony Gilkyson and lead singer Exene Cervenka had teamed up for a new album. Nothing is more depressing than to listen to the sad, middle-aged yawn-puff that so many formerly great rockers embarrass themselves with by making public. I almost cry when I hear certain has-beens limp around the radio airwaves. However, this is not the case with Old Wives Tales. Cervenka and Gilkyson have put out a great album that mixes some mellow acoustic tunes with a few off-beat rockers and jazz blues numbers.

The album starts off with warm acoustic guitars which contrast Exene's cool voice. The music is soft but never dull, as her detached, floating voice wraps around you like a street-wise mother whispering life's secrets. She sings sad and demands your attention, her words filled with vague, surreal imagery. The first side ends with acoustic bass and piano, dripping cool jazz with Exene sighing, "Pour me a famous song, I could listen to your singing all night long."

The second side pours out more acoustic numbers that fill the room with warm familiarity. It's not that you've heard the songs before, but that they feel like you should have. Mandolins and subdued percussion fill out songs that are strong and sweet and never let you down. "Leave Heaven Alone" tackles environmental politics and insists that "we've made an enemy of the sun." Though undoubtedly part of the wave of socially conscious lyrics prevalent in alternative music today, she still comes across as honest and true. The album ends with two upbeat songs, bound to please any music lover. "White Trash Wife" sounds like a Dylan outake from Highway 61 Revisited, and "Coyote on the Town" is a bluesy smoker that ends the album on an upbeat note.

Don't expect the rockabilly punk of X, this is folk/rock of the eighties — original and exciting.

Two jailed, four others fined after pleading guilt to gambling

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Two Holyoke men have been jailed and four other people fined after pleading guilty to charges stemming from a football betting operation.

David C. Theriault, 51, of Holyoke, who prosecutors claimed headed the operation, was sentenced to three to five years in state prison by Judge Raymond Cross after pleading guilty in Hampden Superior Court on Monday to gambling charges.

Assistant District Attorney William Walsh said state police seized $70,000 in cash, plus betting tickets and records in a November raid on Theriault's home. He said the wagering involved college and professional football games.

Frankin C. Lundgren, 42, of Holyoke, who was accused of being one of Theriault's top aides in the operation, was sentenced to 2 1/2 years in jail and fined $1,500.

Cross also fined William T. Reilly, 33, of Chicopee and Walter W. Langevin Jr., 60, both of Chicopee, $1,500 each; Alice G. Lupien — Theriault, 42, of Holyoke, $200 and Stanley J, Lukasik, 60, of Chicopee, $100 after they pleaded guilty to lesser charges.

Former Holyoke Alderman Daniel A. Knapp and Robert J. Carroll of Chicopee had their cases continued for one week and Jeffrey M. Wickles of Hatfield had his case continued for six months.

largest in the country, because of his national reputation for leadership.

He said the chancellor may not focus entirely on the University's budget turmoil during panel discussions because Massachusetts' commitment to public higher education differs from other states'.

"In places like Ohio and Colorado, public higher education is seen as the top of the educational ladder. That seems a little different here," Madson said.

"I think he may tell some of those kinds of stories to make his point," he said. "The challenge in Massachusetts is to get people thinking that public higher education is not just an alternative for people who can't afford private education."

Hundreds rally at Statehouse for abortion

BOSTON (AP) — Scores of abortion-rights supporters rallied at the Statehouse yesterday and tried unsuccessfully to present Senate President William Bulger with a petition favoring their stand.

After the rally, leaders of Mass Choice led dozens of activists to Bulger's office to present him with petitions asking that abortion rights be protected.

A secretary told them Bulger, an abortion foe, was in a meeting and would not meet with them. The secretary took the petition containing an estimated 40,000 signatures from Mass Choice President Laura Dowd.

The secretary also asked a television cameraman to leave the office.

Standing outside Bulger's office, Mass Choice Executive Director Pam Nourse said, "The leadership of Massachusetts and Sen. Bulger are definitely out of step with the people of Massachusetts."

The group is trying to place a constitutional amendment on the 1992 ballot that would guarantee a woman's right to have an abortion.

In order to get on the ballot, the amendment must be approved by two consecutive sessions of the Legislature.

The crowd of about 200 at the rally gave loud approval to Sen. Lois Pines, D-Newton, who said, "Read our lips. Listen to our words. Pro-choice now and forever."

Pines said some legislators vote against abortion even though people in their districts are majority pro-choice.

To those legislators, Pines said, "Big Sister is watching you. And we're going to keep watching you."

Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy, whose hopes for the 1990 Democratic nomination for governor are tied in part to her strong pro-choice stand, told the group, "Keep the pressure up. Keep the visibility up, I'll be there over and over again for you, to be with you."

Rep. Marjorie Clapprood, D-Sharon, an unannounced candidate for lieutenant governor, said, "The issue of choice is the most profound expression of self-determination known to humankind."

Officials: new policy for prisons needed

BOSTON (AP) — Cuts in human services will mean more drug offenders are jailed and fewer are helped, said Human Services Secretary Philip W. Johnston.

This leaves the state the impossible and expensive task of trying to build enough prison cells to hold drug offenders, while rehabilitation is cheaper and probably more effective, Johnston said.

The state Human Services budget has been cut more than $400 million in the last 16 months, draining drug abuse programs, housing and health care.

"Clearly, to the extent that the prison population largely consists of low-income people and to the extent that it consists of minorities, the budget cuts will have an ironic and tragic impact in boosting the number of people who are committed to state correctional faciilities," Johnston said Monday. "And it's going to end up costing the state more."

Johnston said the state could not solve the problems of drug abuse simply by building more prisons.

"Are we going to spend all additional public resources on incarcerating criminals, or are we going to become more creative in dealing with new realities of this new population?" he asked.

Two elite schools added to Justice Dept. list

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The University of Pennsylvania and Bryn Mawr College are two of four schools that have been added to a Justice Department investigation of possible anti-trust violations.

The investigation involves about 20 prestigious schools and financial aid policies.

Princeton University and Wellesley College also have been included in the investigation, which is aimed at determining whether the practice of schools conferring with each other to establish similar financial aid packages to students is a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the Philadelphia Inquirer reported yesterday.

Officials at all four schools said their respective institutions would cooperate with the probe, and all denied they violated any antitrust laws.

"While we do not believe the college's practices are in violation of the Sherman Act, we will comply fully with the Justice Department's request for information," said Bryn Mawr spokeswoman Debra Thomas.

Justice Department spokeswoman Amy Brown in Washington refused to comment on the four schools now included in the investigation, or the possibility that others may be included later, the Inquirer said.

The federal department announced in August that it was investigating possible antitrust violations in the establishing of tuition and financial aid at 20 private schools, including Harvard and the University of Chicago.

Many of the institutions are members of the New England Overlap Group, an organization that meets each year to set up similar financial aid programs to students who are admitted to more than one school in the group.

The schools contend that the similar practices avoid "bidding wars" for students and lets them choose a school based on its academic worth rather than the amount of financial aid it offers.

The Wall Street Journal reported last May, however, that members of the Overlap Group were "part of a price-fixing system that OPEC might envy."

The four schools are Overlap Group members. But the schools said Monday's notices made no specific mention of any wrongdoing, according to the Inquirer.

"It isn't clear to me that this request for information alleges anything," said Robert Durkee, vice president for public affairs at Princeton. "All we are doing at this point is responding to a request for information."

The Justice Department had asked for information regarding tuition, fees, student financial aid, and faculty and administrative salaries, according to the Inquirer. The information is to cover 1985 through 1988 and must be provided by the end of the month.

"Our lawyers are looking into the request," Epstein said.

"We intend to cooperate fully with the Justice Department. We believe we are in compliance with the law."

Officials at several of the schools included in the Overlap Group say that tuition would be even higher than the $18,000 charged by some for tuition, room and board if bidding wars were being waged to obtain students who needed financial help.

sex and from July 1985 through August 1987 as a housekeeper-driver paid from the lawmaker's own funds.

The committee resolution said the panel was "aware of assertions relating to the conduct of Rep. Barney Frank in connection with his employment of a personal assistant." The panel "has determined that the matters merit further inquiry," the resolution added.

The committee action was unanimous.

The vote began only the first round of the House's internal disciplinary process, and will determine whether a more complete investigation is necessary. The panel, officially the committee on Standards of Official Conduct, can issue subpoenas and take testimony during the preliminary stage.

The inquiry could lead to a statement of alleged violation, which is similar to an indictment. This could in turn result in a disciplinary proceeding and a recommendation for punishment to the full House, ranging from a reprimand to expulsion.

Gobie has said in interviews that he used Frank's Capitol Hill apartment to run a prostitution ring with the lawmaker's knowledge, but Frank repeatedly denied knowing about that activity.

Gobie, whose involvement with Frank was first reported by The Washington Times last month, has publicly expressed willingness to testify before the ethics committee if his lawyer approved.

Gioiosa guilty of cocaine and conspiracy charges

CINCINNATI (AP) — A U.S. District Court jury yesterday convicted Thomas Gioiosa of conspiring to distribute cocaine and of conspiring to hide Pete Rose's racetrack winnings from the Internal Revenue Service.

Gioiosa, 31, of New Bedford, could be sentenced to 28 years in federal prison and fined up to $1.5 million. U.S. District Judge S. Arthur Spiegel did not immediately set a sentencing date.

The jury found Gioiosa innocent of two counts of filing false income tax returns for 1985 and 1986.

Gioiosa, who lived at Rose's suburban Cincinnati home from 1979 to 1984, had pleaded innocent to all five counts. His lawyers said Gioiosa's judgement was impaired by his heavy use of steroid drugs during the mid-1980s, when the government said he failed to report income and acted as a middleman to transport cocaine from south Florida to the Cincinnati area.

The jurors deliberated for 4½ hours on Monday before reaching the verdict yesterday afternoon.

The jury got the case after defense lawyers said in closing arguments that Gioiosa cashed a $47,646 racetrack ticket from Turfway Park in Florence, KY, for Rose out of friendship, not as part of a tax-fraud scheme.

Defense lawyer Martin Weinberg argued that the government had failed to prove a tax-fraud conspiracy between the former housemates. He also suggested that federal prosecutors were using Gioiosa's case to get to Rose, who is under investigation by a grand jury.

"There's no proof that Pete Rose cheated the government at all in this case, and no proof of any conspiracy," Weinberg said. "Instead, what the government's attempted to do is architect a tax case against Pete Rose on the basis of Tommy and Pete Rose being close frienmds for eight years."

Rose, who has not been charged with any crime, is under investigation by a federal grand jury in Cincinnati that is looking into whether the former Cincinnati Reds manager claimed all his income from gambling, memorabilia sales and autograph appearances.

The Gioiosa case went to the jury exactly four years to the day that Rose hit for No. 4,192, making him baseball's all-time hits leader. Rose was banned for life from baseball on Aug. 24 for illegal gambling.

Jones has career day vs. Jets

FOXBORO (AP) — Cedric Jones followed the worst season of his career with the best game of his career.

The wide receiver didn't get overly depressed about last year's problems that left his job with the New England Patriots in jeopardy. And he's not especially excited about the change this year.

"I keep it on an even keel all the way, not too happy, not too sad. You take the good with the bad and just keep trucking." Jones said. "If you're a fighter and get knocked down some times, you have to get up and fight back."

Last year, his seventh in the NFL since the Patriots drafted him from Duke in the third round in 1982, Jones caught 22 passes. He was more concerned about the five or six he said he dropped.

"That's the most I've had in my career." he said.

So in the off-season, he bought a passing machine, his mother, father, brother and sisters loaded it and he caught 400 passes a day, he said.

The investment paid off last Sunday when he had career highs of eight catches and 148 receiving yards in a 27-24 season opening victory against the New York Jets. His 31-yard reception to the New York 7-yard line set up Reggie Dupard's winning touchdown on a 4-yard run with 1:55 left.

■ Cedric Jones has career day

Last year, when New England stressed its running attack, Jones never caught more than three passes a game as a backup to Stanley Morgan and Irving Fryar.

"I lost confidence. I got in a stupor. We weren't throwing the ball and I just didn't play well," Jones said.

In the off-season, the Patriots added three wide receivers - draft choices Hart Lee Dykes and Michael Timpson and free agent Mike Jones. They already had Morgan, Fryar and Sammy Martin.

How much longer would Cedric Jones be around after seven seasons as primarily a backup in which his single-game highs were five catches and 74 receiving yards? He had averaged just 17 catches a season.

"I can't worry about who we draft, or who we're playing. I just have to take care of my business," he said. "I wasn't concerned about making the team."

"You take the good years with the bad years and come back stronger. That's what I think gets the athletes to this point, the ability to overcome."

With Mike Jones having been cut and Timpson on injured reserved, Cedric Jones' job is now secure.

He said quarterback Tony Eason's pinpoint passing and the threat posed by other New England receivers helped him against the jets.

Jones started in place of Fryar, who had practiced less than a week after holding out most of training camp. But Fryar saw considerable action and he and Morgan each caught as touchdown pass.

With Jones and Eason off to strong starts, the Patriots' could have their most potent passing game in years. Coach Raymond Berry's problem is finding ways to use all his receiving weapons.

"The formations are one way," he said. "You've got to get them out on the field. If you can, that's a lot of talent."

THAT NO-GOOD, ROTTEN MOE! HE WON'T GIVE MY TRUCK BACK TO ME. THE OAF WILL PROBABLY BREAK IT, TOO.
SHOULD I STEAL IT BACK? I KNOW STEALING IS WRONG, BUT HE STOLE IT FROM ME, AND IF I DON'T STEAL IT BACK, MOE WILL JUST KEEP IT, AND THAT'S NOT FAIR.
THEY SAY TWO WRONGS DON'T MAKE A RIGHT, BUT WHAT ARE YOU SUPPOSED TO DO THEN? JUST LET THE BIGGEST GUY MAKE HIS OWN RULES ALL THE TIME? LET MIGHT MAKE RIGHT?
... THAT SOUNDS REASONABLE.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Distant events will have a powerful effect on your future. Use a conservative financial approach to improve the bottom line. Seize opportunity to break old habits. You win big in a romantic showdown.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Follow your artistic and creative urges today. Freelancers can land plum assignments. Take an indirect approach when trying to solve a difficult personal problem. Know when to pull back.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Business negotiations are challenging and require much skill. Someone who makes romantic overtures may not appeal to you now. Be gentle. Your first impression could be misleading.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): Do not back down on your promises to others. A teenager is relying on you. Address any tax problems by getting in touch with accountants. Avoid anyone who seems manipulative. You know better.
LEO (July 23-Aug 22): Business propositions come from out of nowhere. Rely on conventional methods only. An authority figure may be testing you; do not come unglued. Sign contracts and agreements. An older person is a real romantic possibility.
LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): Do not let outsiders tell you how to spend your money. A lingering physical problem deserves attention; see a specialist. Go all out to maintain family harmony. Your optimism is contagious!
SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Renewed enthusiasm helps you deal with stubborn people or a difficult situation. Put your thoughts on paper before entering into discussions with clients. A health problem responds to regular treatment.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): The day may get off to a slow start. Persevere! Your mate or family is unusually supportive. Overseas contacts could have a far-reaching effect on romance.
CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): Get in touch with former business associates who may want to back your pet project. It will be much easier to deal with someone you already know. Put romance on the back burner.
AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): There is more than meets the eye going on today. Use important contacts prudently. Even if you have to make some concessions, the results will be financially beneficial. Seek new investments.
PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): Requests for loans are likely to be granted. Be ready for some turbulence in romance. Loved one may be saying one thing but thinking another. Get to the root of your differences.

certainly lived up to her name as she played a gem against the Reds in last year's contest. "She played a blinder against us," said Rudy. "We were losing 1-0 and had hit the crossbar five times, then we scored two goals in 49 seconds. If she's on, it'll be tough." About her daring goalie style, Rudy said, "She'll go after stuff that nobody will go after."

The Reds will basically have the same starting eleven on the field, and no, Rudy hasn't decided on a No. 1 keeper after seeing both Mary Curtis and Skye Eddy in net over the weekend.

"They both looked good," said Rudy. "Mary got beat on two very difficult balls [against Virginia]. What Skye did well was on her distribution. She was good on her goalkicks [all but one failed to reach midfield], her throws were safe, and we didn't lose any to turnovers."

The only probably starting lineup change will occur in the midfield with the injury to Kim Montgomery (ankle).

Coach John Carter's offensive game plan starts from short balls out of their end of the field, then working slowly up the field. Rudy plans to counter with a trapping defense, with the two forwards and a midfielder forming a triangle to slide with the ball. "We'll try to make the game a little more predictable," said Rudy.

Rudy feels that this game is especially important because it will be the first road trip with the girls and Vermont won't exactly be the most hospitable hosts. "They'll crash a lot of people into the box," said Rudy. "They'll bite, scratch, and scrape. They have a very good crowd [at A.T. Post Field] and they'll get noisier as Goodman does that somersault throw-in. They'll be pumped because they haven't beaten us in a while."

Smith is a solid candidate for the sweeper job, having played there last year for the first few games of the season before Julie Stuart took over and turned into a force (Stuart graduated). "We've seen her there a little," Hixon said.

Hixon feels that Fagan can do the job, but the multi-talented junior may be more valuable for the Minutewomen up front. Fagan scored the first goal for UMass in Saturday's game off a penalty corner on a blast from the top of the circle.

"We're also looking at, possibly, Kerri, at sweeper," Hixon said. "Kerri is an excellent center-back as well, so she may have a couple of jobs during the season."

Junior Beth Thornton impressed throughout preseason camp and the first few days of school. It seems that Hixon has always had a good word or two about Thornton this year.

"Beth Thornton did a great job overlapping," Hixon said about Thornton's play in Saturday's game. "She and Kim Hannigan actually created a lot. We've been trying to work her [Thornton] in a little bit at sweeper. She's a forward. She's very strong and very smart. We moved her back to the backfield to have her learn how to play defense."

Who plays goal is very simple. It is either sophomore Lisa Charron or England's Phillipa Scott. Charron drew the start in Springfield and has played more on grass than Scott, which may or may not tell you who will tend the net for the Minutewomen today.

Hixon said that juniors Lisa Berardinelli and Kim Hannigan have looked strong so far. Other players who have a shot to log some minutes are freshmen Kathy Phelan and Joy Blenis as well as Laura Johnson who sat on the bench last season.

"Those are the people that we're looking at," Hixon said. "Now it's just a matter of getting our strongest, most experienced group out there to do the job."

In that group, Berardinelli has the most experience. She seen a few spot starts during the season when Fagan was injured and earned a start in the NCAA playoffs.

BC, 1-1, has beat Georgetown and lost to Villanova, both on the road in the first season that the Big East has put together a field hockey conference.

"They've got some solid midfielders returning," Hixon said. "They should be okay. A lot is going to depend on what we can take away from them."

The defense taking the ball from the Eagles' forwards before they unload for a shot would be nice.

Senior midfielder Kathy DeAngelis and the Minutewomen play host to Boston College this afternoon at Totman Field.

Men's soccer dumped by Wildcats, 2-1

The men's soccer team dropped its second straight game yesterday at New Hampshire, 2-1.

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Correspondent

Despite a 2-1 loss to the University of New Hampshire yesterday, University of Massachusetts men's soccer coach Jeff Gettler was proud of his team's efforts.

UMass dominated field play early by scoring 10 minutes into the game. About 35 yards from the box, the Minutemen picked up a free kick and proceeded to set up a decoy play in which senior back Tom Skiba pulled up to pass to senior forward Steve Cesnek who worked his way into the box, turned and scored.

Later in the first half, junior midfielder Peter McEvoy attempted a header saved by Wildcat freshman Erik DeGregorio. DeGregorio had four saves for the game as compared to freshman Steve Armenti's one save. Armenti played the entire game; this was his collegiate debut.

The action continued as junior forward Carl Hanks took a corner kick which sophomore forward Ray Cunha headed in to break the plane of the goal line. DeGregorio caught the ball in midair and no score was called. This was a much disputed call as it was later confirmed the ball crossed the line.

"We saw a lot of midfield action," said assistant coach John Martin. "We were dangerous but we just couldn't score."

Twenty-three minutes into the game, the Wildcats intercepted a pass at midfield and pushed it forward. Moving the ball closer to the net, freshman forward Corey McKim assisted sophomore forward Frank Truscott who chipped the ball in for the Wildcats. The Minutemen's Armenti made the initial save which bounced the ball off the post right back to Truscott who then slammed the back of the net for New Hampshire's first goal.

The teams volleyed to a 1-1 tie at the half. The second half was just as tedious. "We had numerous offensive opportunities we just didn't cash in on," said Martin.

Late in the game, UNH booted the ball down the field to tinker around long enough to get a corner kick. With nine minutes left, senior midfielder Scott Brennan took the corner kick for the Wildcats, who popped the ball to sophomore back Christian Pearlsal, cleanly heading it in for a 2-1 game.

There were a total of three shots on the goal taken by UNH; UMass took four shots. The Minutemen outshot the Wildcats by 16 to 7.

'The midfield played very well today," said Gettler. "[Senior Bill] Kousmanidis, [junior Peter] McEvoy, [sophomore Brett] Anthony and [sophomore Tom] Novajasky were really tight. We played with all 11 players."

Men's tennis takes opening meet from Bentley

By JIM CLARK
Collegan Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team got its season off to a fine start yesterday when it beat Bentley College, 7-2 in Waltham.

The Minutemen look to make it two in a row when they host Franklin Pierce College today in a late addition to the schedule. The match, one of only two home matches the team will play this fall, will be at 3 p.m. at the Upper Boyden Courts.

Things didn't start out so well for the Minutemen, who dropped two of the three doubles matches.

"They played the doubles matches first. We're not used to that," said UMass coach Manny Roberts. Salvaging the lone win was the tandem of Barry Wadsworth and Paul Audet, which at the number two position swept up Bentley 6-4, 7-5.

The number one team of Chris Johnson and Lloyd Teitlebaum dropped a straight-set 6-2, 7-5 match, and at No. 3, Jeff Hechemy and Rich Stone were also swept, 7-6, 6-2.

Down 2-1, UMass had to make its move in the traditionally stronger singles play.

"I told them 'you have to win five, but we'd like to win all six,'" Roberts said.

Not to worry. The coach's wish was the team's command, as the Minutemen swept all six matches to take the meet.

Wadsworth, a transfer from Penn State and a native of South Hadley, rolled to a 6-4, 6-3 win, while Audet cleaned up at No. 2 in 6-2, 6-4 fashion. Hechemy (7-6, 6-4), Stone (6-2, 6-0) and Teitlebaum (6-2, 6-1) also picked up straight-set wins.

At sixth singles, Johnson was the only player to be pushed to a third set after losing the opener, 6-4. But he regained his composure and rallied to take the final two, 6-1, 6-4.

April Kater and the Minutewomen travel to Vermont this afternoon, looking for their second straight win.

Women's soccer at UVM

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

Today's women's soccer matchup between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Vermont will not only be a contrast of Christmas colors, but also one of experience.

The Lady Cats have a veteran roster with all but two letterwinners coming back, and on the other side of the coin, the Minutewomen have eight personnel or position changes.

This huge roster edge on paper hasn't seemed to help Vermont so far, as they remain winless with a 0-1-1 record. They were edged by an extremely tough Connecticut team by a 1-0 score and knotted with the Eagles from Boston College in a 1-1 tie Saturday.

Their top players on offense include tri-captain Chris Goodman and sophomore Rachel Bondy. Goodman, besides being the team's second-leading scorer with 7 goals and 6 assists for 20 points, is best known for her 'flip-flop,' the unique somersault throw-in from the sideline. Rudy said, "She can throw the ball 40-50 yards into the goal box." Bondy led the Lady Cats in scoring with 11 goals and 3 assists for 25 points as a freshman. Rudy describes Bondy as an aggressive left-footed forward who will be their primary scoring threat.

On defense, Vermont has two of the best in the region with sweeper Kathy Hodgdon and goalie Jen Starr. Hodgdon is a tri- captain who was an All-New England defender. Starr (0.96 GAA, six shutouts last year)

Field hockey entertains Boston College

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Lecture number two on the syllabus for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team: defense.

The Minutewomen's backfield gave up two goals in Saturday's 3-2 win over Syracuse University which may sound like a small number. But in field hockey, two is usually enough for the decision.

So UMass coach Pam Hixon has decided to make defense the lesson for the week. The Minutewomen, 1-0, will be handed a little quiz today, when they faceoff against Boston College at Totman Field (3:30 p.m.).

"Our weakness, really is what we thought it would be, finding the right group of people on defense," Hixon said. "We lost so much of our defense last year, that we're really trying to piece it together again. So that is our job for the next week, find out what's going to be our final group of defenders."

All the pieces to this puzzle do not fit though. Hixon has to figure out which players go where. A goalie, a side-back, a sweeper, and two or three midfielders are in demand from last year's starting lineup which was depleted by graduation.

"Right now, we really are unsure of who our best combination of defenders are," Hixon said. "Kerri Fagan and Smitty [senior co-captain Carol Smith] are really our only two returning defenders [from the starting lineup last year]. Our midfield is almost entirely new with the exception of Bernie [Martel] who saw both starting and off-and-on action towards the end of the season. So in essence we've got six new people to fill in for . . . We're really looking to find what is the best defensive group we have."

Smith and Mount Holyoke scanned for anti-trust violation

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

The US Justice Department has added Smith College and Mount Holyoke College to the list of colleges and universities in the east that are under investigation for the possible violation of anti-trust acts.

The addition of the two women's colleges brings to three the number of colleges in the Five College area that are now under federal scrutiny. Amherst College was placed on the list last month.

About 20 private schools have been asked to turn over tuition, financial aid, and administrative and faculty salary information to the Justice Department since the investigations began in July.

The department apparently suspects that the institutions are sharing financial aid reports and setting tuition rates in collusion according to the figures. Investigators are attempting to determine if this action violates the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

The suspected schools' tuition rates are set at about the same amount and tend to rise similarly each year. The schools also offer students eligible for financial aid approximately the same aid package.

Mary Maples Dunn, Smith College president, said: "I don't think Smith violated the anti-trust law in letter or in spirit of the law. Financial aid is not a price for a product, it's a grant for a student."

Officials at Mount Holyoke College could not be reached yesterday for comment.

Dunn said officials at Smith are gathering the financial information the department has requested and will cooperate fully with the federal authorities.

The latest schools to be placed on the list are part of the department's second wave of investigations. Most institutions were notified of their status in July.

"I didn't expect it [to be placed on the list]," Dunn said. "But I can't say I was surprised."

Wellesley College and Bryn Mawr College were placed under investigation on Monday, joining Williams College, Harvard University and Tufts University on the list.

"Clearly they're seeking information from a whole class of private institutions," Dunn said.

Forum to kick off fight against cuts

Area legislators scheduled to attend

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Student Trustee Eric Nakajima is kicking off his campaign to fight additional budget cuts to state colleges and universities today with an informational forum to be held at noon in the Student Union ballroom.

The event is expected to draw invited guests Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, Rep. Stanley Rosenberg, D-Amherst, and Professor John Cole from the University of Massachusetts anthropology department.

The forum is designed to educate students, faculty and staff about the cutbacks' effects and "energize" the groups in fighting the implementation of further cuts, he said.

"I want to focus people on getting involved in fighting the budget cuts," Nakajima said. "If a lot of people show up, it will be all over the state that UMass cares, that we are educated and energized.

"We will make a difference. Public higher education will be an issue in the 1990 governor's election," he said.

Members of the faculty are scheduled to lecture on the decline in research facilities and staff members will discuss the impact of position layoffs on campus, he said.

Nakajima urged students to attend the forum and make area legislators aware of the impact the cutbacks have had on their academic life.

"I think it would be wonderful if students came and talked about their problems getting courses and their problems paying for their education," Nakajima said.

He said he hopes to enlist students for the budget "Crisis Action Team," a grassroots committee he formed this semester to fight the cuts.

Nakajima said his "team" and the Leadership Coalition, composed of graduate students, and faculty and staff unions, will work together to keep the University accessible, so students of all origins and financial backgrounds can obtain a quality education.

Duke to fight discrimination

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON – Gov. Michael S. Dukakis announced a plan yesterday to fight discrimination in mortgage lending, including expanded enforcement by the state Banking Division and new legislation to give regulators more powers.

The plan announced by the governor followed a report by the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston that documented that race has been a factor in home mortgage lending in Boston.

"The Federal Reserve Bank study should be the concern of every fair-minded citizen of Massachusetts," Dukakis said. "The steps I'm announcing today will help guarantee that credit in the Commonwealth is color blind."

The immediate steps announced by Dukakis will target state-chartered banks in Boston and other urban areas for tougher evaluations of their compliance with the Community Reinvestment Act. It will also link Community Reinvestment Act performance to all bank applications requiring the state Banking Division's approval.

The act is a federal law, which also has a very similar state counterpart, that states, "Every financial institution has a continuing and affirmative obligation, consistent with safe and sound operation, to help meet the credit needs of its entire community."

Next week, Dukakis said, he will ask the Legislature to approve several proposals to strengthen the power of state regulators to assure there is no discrimination in mortgage lending.

The governor's proposals would require mandatory participation in a mortgage review board process by all lenders in the state and expand the size and diversity of the four regional boards by including a member of the public. The program now is limited to lenders that voluntarily agree to participate.

The boards have the authority to review mortgages to make sure there is no geographic discrimination in lending practices.

Senate spares co-senators

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

A controversial motion prohibiting two senators from holding one seat was defeated by a two-vote margin at the Undergraduate Student Senate's first meeting of the semester last night.

Senators engaged in more than two hours of heated debate over the issue, which was introduced soon after the senate agreed to open nominations today for senate elections scheduled for Sept. 25.

Had the motion passed, students would have been prevented from running as co-senators in the upcoming elections.

Sen. Dan Chesnicka (Wheeler), who sponsored the motion, said two people often run on the same ticket because they cannot devote the necessary time to their senatorial duties. He added that these duties are often neglected in spite of this partnership.

"If you don't have the time, don't run," Chesnicka said. "A senator has to be able to give one hundred percent."

Chesnicka also said the co-senatorships contradict the most recent draft of the Student Government Association's Constitution, which has yet to be ratified by the Board of Trustees.

"Ratifying the constitution should be the most important priority on our agenda," he said, adding that he plans to re-submit the motion.

Sen. Tim Bucciarelli (Baker) charged that co-senatorships are students' ways of forming coalitions when they are afraid they might be defeated in an election.

"[Co-senatorships] are cop outs," said Bucciarelli.

Opposing Sen. Nathan O'Leary (Webster), who is a co-senator, asked the senate to table the motion until after the elections are completed. He said many students, including himself, are planning to run as co-senators.

"Students haven't been given enough warning of this motion," O'Leary said.

Questioning the motion's fairness, Student Trustee Eric Nakajima asked whether barring co-senatorships would be a form of income-based discrimination.

He said people who have to hold part-time jobs are not able to devote enough time to be senators by themselves.

"[Co-senatorships] are part of equal opportunity," said Nakajima.

In other business:

- A motion making orientation mandatory for all newly-elected senators was passed by a vote of 28-4.
- The senate voted unanimously to pass a motion stating that the Budgets Committee will advise SGA registrar Jennifer Ott in activating Registered Student Organizations.

Elected to serve on the committee were Sens. Buccianelli, Diedre Pierotti (Leach), acting Commuter Area President Clarinda Rose-Turner, and Brett Min (Third World Caucus).

CAG nominations to open today

Elections scheduled to be held Sept. 25

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Area Government has scheduled elections for all official posts except president for Sept. 25, acting CAG president Clarinda Rose-Turner announced yesterday.

Nomination papers will be available today in the CAG office in the Student Union building for the positions of vice president, treasurer, and the 13-member CAG Governing Board, Rose-Turner said.

The deadline for students to submit all nomination papers is Sept. 21.

The government, which has a history of internal turmoil, has not filled its presidential position since last semester when former president Jay Festa withdrew from the University.

An effort was made to fill the post during elections held last semester, which resulted in the election of co-candidates Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes.

The pair defeated co-candidates Robb Smith and Ted Chambers by four votes.

The president's position was frozen soon afterward, however, because Smith and Chambers appealed the election results to the Student Judiciary, claiming procedural errors during the voting process distorted the results.

Rose-Turner, who was elected vice president last April, said the judiciary has not yet issued a decision and blasted the student justices for "making it very difficult to run a coherent government."

Until a decision is handed down, presidential elections will not be scheduled, she said.

"No one can do anything until the court gives us the go-ahead," she said. "They have to either lift the injunction or give us a decision."

The treasurer's position was made vacant this summer after the death of Steve Gardescu, who was elected to the post last April. He died in July after he was struck by lightning while camping.

BOG to propose new office space allotment

The Board of Governors is scheduled to review a proposal tonight to allot new office space to the Office of Third World Affairs and three Registered Student Organizations, BOG President Charlotte Carter said last night.

If the motion is approved, Carter said new office space may be allocated to the Office of Third World Affairs, Spectrum, the campus literary magazine, and the Greek Area Government.

According to the proposal, the Office of Third World Affairs, which is now located at 308 Student Union, is slated to receive office space in 407 Student Union.

The office formerly housed Student Government Association Treasurer Laura Filkins, who has since relocated to 420 Student Union.

WMUA, the campus radio station, will be able to expand if the proposal is approved, Carter said. The radio station is scheduled to receive new office space in Campus Center room 103, while retaining its studio space in Campus Center room 102.

Carter said Spectrum, now housed in the Campus Center, is scheduled to share office space with the Greek Area Government in room 406E in the Student Union.

The office is the former headquarters of Student Government Association President Tracy Davis and Student Trustee Eric Nakajima, who are scheduled to relocate to room 420 Student Union, Carter said.

In other business:

- The governors are schuled to review a proposal, which was passed over the summer and tabled last week, to extend the deadline for hiring coordinators and their assistants from mid-September to early October.
- The Board will elect members to a search committee which is responsible for hiring BOG coordinators. These include the facilities coordinator, who is responsible for the space allocations for RSOs in the Student Union and Campus Center, and the Program Council coordinator, who is responsible for concerts and other programming.

Teens named in crime spree

DARTMOUTH (AP) — Two teen-agers face more than 30 charges in an alleged crime spree that targeted the elderly, including a 90-year-old woman whose house was robbed three times.

Daniel Casey, 17, was being held in lieu of $20,000 cash bail Tuesday pending a Sept. 20 court appearance. He pleaded innocent to charges of burglary, attempted burglary and larceny.

The other teen-ager is a 16-year-old juvenile, police said, and information about his identity or status was unavailable.

The two face 10 counts of burglary and 10 counts of larceny in connection with break-ins at 10 Dartmouth apartments. The pair also faces 10 counts of attempted burglary related to unsuccessful break-ins, police said.

All the incidents occurred within the past month, said Sgt. Randall M. Medeiros.

Most of those breaks were in the homes of elderly persons, when the residents were home, he said.

A 90-year-old woman was home two out of three times when break-ins occurred. Too frightened to leave her room when she heard the intruders, she waited until they were gone before summoning the police, Medeiros said.

PEACE MARCH — The huge cosmopolitan crowd gathered in downtown Cape Town yesterday outside St. George's Cathedral before marching to City Hall.

South African march peaceful

Tutu: We are unstoppable

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — More than 20,000 peaceful protesters sang songs of freedom and waved banners denouncing police brutality yesterday in the biggest anti-government march ever permitted in this country.

Police stayed out of sight as marchers — led by black leaders and Cape Town's white mayor — clogged a mile-long route leading from St. George's Anglican Cathedral to City Hall.

Organizers described the march as a historic occurrence in this racially-divided nation.

"We have scored a great victory for justice and peace," Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu told a crowd of 1,800 black, white and mixed-race marchers who packed City Hall while thousands of others stood outside.

He said acting President F.W. de Klerk should have been present "to see what this country is going to become . . . a technicolor country."

The absence of police contrasted sharply with protest marches two weeks ago in Cape Town that were broken up by riot squads using whips, batons and a water cannon that sprayed purple water.

"It is important to know we could have this peaceful march toward our freedom," said the Rev. Frank Chikane, secretary- general of the South African Council of Churches. "Once that has started today, no one can ever stop it again."

Protest demonstrations normally are illegal in South Africa, and the Cape Town police commander, Maj. Gen. Phillipus Fourie, said last week he would stop yesterday's march. But de Klerk announced Tuesday evening that the protest could proceed because it had been assured it would be peaceful.

The far-right Conservative Party, the largest white opposition group in Parliament, said yesterday that approval of the march was "capitulation" to radicals.

An anti-apartheid lawyer, Dullah Omar, praised the marchers for maintaining discipline.

"What you have done is to prove that, when the police are not here, when the batons and the [whips] and the tear gas is not around, then there is no violence," he said.

After singing "We Shall Overcome," jubilant marchers set off from St. George's behind Tutu, Mayor Gordon Oliver and the Rev. Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

Youths chanted freedom songs and waved banners that said, "Peace In Our City" and "Stop Killing Our People."

At City Hall, those unable to fit inside stood in a parking lot, waiting for speakers to emerge.

Oliver and Tutu received standing ovations inside City Hall, and youths lauded the mayor in a chant usually used to honor leaders of the outlawed African National Congress guerilla movement.

"Today, we all have the freedom of the city," Oliver said.

At the close of the rally, Tutu asked the crowd to stand, link hands and chant, "We are unstoppable."

Hungary wants new agreement

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — The deputy foreign minister said yesterday that Hungary's agreements limiting movement of East bloc citizens are out of step with its human rights commitments and it will seek to revise them.

Ferenc Somogyi also said Hungary will continue to dismantle border barriers but does not plan to be a springboard to the West.

Budapest's decision this week to allow the exodus of more than 12,000 East Germans to the West was "a unique step," Somogyi said.

In Austria, border authorities said that by late yesterday afternoon the number of East Germans crossing from Hungary en route to West Germany had climbed to 12,545 since the freedom convoy began at midnight Sunday.

Bavarian border police gave a similar estimate and said the push to the West had peaked.

Polish television, meanwhile, reported that about 50 East Germans seeking freedom in the West have taken refuge in the West German Embassy in Warsaw.

The Telexpress TV news program showed pictures of the refugees, including children at play in the embassy courtyard.

Budapest's reform-minded government, risking censure from its Warsaw Pact allies and courting Western praise, allowed the East Germans to leave for West Germany via Austria.

Its decision to defy an ally and work together with West Germany to let the East Germans emigrate marks the first time a Warsaw Pact country has cooperated with a NATO nation to help citizens of an allied country resettle in the West.

But in Prague, about 250 of 400 refugees gave up Tuesday and left the embassy compound after East Berlin promised they would be allowed to apply to emigrate legally.

EPA needs funds to clean waste

WALTHAM (AP) — The federal government will have to spend $30 billion more than originally estimated to clean the nation's worst hazardous waste sites, a US Environmental Protection Agency official said Tuesday.

Paul G. Keough, regional administrator for the EPA, said the government underestimated the cost of priority cleanup projects for 1,200 waste sites, which he said will take agents more than 15 years to begin all necessary procedures.

"There are thousands of more sites that need to be evaluated and we expect to be adding between 75 and 100 new sites to the priority list each year," Keough said.

Congress passed a Superfund bill in 1980 that provided a $1.6 billion fund that was expected to cover the cleanup costs of all hazardous waste sites.

The law was revised in 1986, with an additional $8.6 billion and 1,200 sites listed as priority.

But Keough, at a meeting of the Society of Military Engineers, said the Superfund was insufficient because the average cleanup cost per site is $25 million.

He said cleanup efforts of the 83 Superfund sites in New England will cost an average of five times more than experts originally calculated. Ground water cleanup, Keough said, could take decades to complete.

Kentucky explosion kills 10

WHEATCROFT, Ky. (AP) — A methane gas explosion in a coal mine in western Kentucky killed 10 miners and injured at least two yesterday, State Police said.

The blast was the nation's worst coal mine disaster in five years, said the federal Mine Health and Safety Administration.

Capt. Robert Forsythe, State Police commander at Madisonville, said he received the report from a trooper at the scene. The accident occurred at Pyro Mining Co.'s William Station Mine, about 140 miles southwest of Louisville.

Forsythe said 13 miners were near where the explosion occurred, between 9:30 and 9:45 a.m. CDT, and three escaped. One body was recovered and nine other miners were dead inside the mine, the commander said.

Nancy Toombs, a secretary for state Commissioner of Mines and Minerals Willard Stanley, said rescue teams were working inside the mine.

House approves money for victims

BOSTON (AP) — A bill to provide more money for crime victims cleared a major hurdle in the Massachusetts House on Tuesday and may reach the governor's desk by the end of the week.

The House went along with Senate changes to the measure, and the bill is expected to receive final House approval on Thursday, its sponsor, Rep. Joseph Mackey, D-Somerville, said.

The measure would raise an estimated $5 million in additional money by increasing victim-witness fees levied against criminal offenders. Fees would increase from $15 to $30 for misdemeanors, deliquency and non-payment of assessments and from $25 to $30 for felonies.

The legislative package would also place mortgage companies, mortgage brokers and all parties making five or more mortgage loans a year under the specific licensing and examination powers of the division of banks.

Mortgage companies, a fast-growing segment of the financial services industries, now are not regulated by the state. Consumer Affairs Secretary Mary Ann Walsh has made their regulation a priority issue on her legislative agenda.

The Dukakis legislative package also would make community reinvestment evaluations public records. Now the law requires them to be kept confidential.

In addition, Dukakis said, an interstate banking bill already pending in the Legislature would require out-of-state banks entering the state to make available assets to support affordable housing programs if they wanted to purchase in-state banks.

Massachusetts now has a reciprocal agreement with other New England states on interstate banking, but does not allow other out-of-state banks to enter the state.

"Immediate steps will be taken to target state-chartered lenders in Boston and other urban areas for compliance with their community investment responsibilities," Walsh said.

State Banking Commissioner Andrew J. Calamare said the measures announced yesterday would enhance the ability of his division to assure the credit needs of low and moderate income people are met.

He said the division in the past 2½ years already has cited 14 Boston state-chartered banks for inadequate performance.

According to the Banking Division, there are 42 state-chartered banks in the Boston area, and a grand total of 294 in the state.

Accounting inadequate in secondary schools

DeNucci releases statewide audit of colleges and universities

BOSTON (AP) — The state's public colleges and universities have provided inadequate accounting and administrative controls over trust funds and $550 million spent during 1987 was not subject to state review, Auditor A. Joseph DeNucci said yesterday.

DuNucci released a statewide audit of the approximately 7,000 public higher education trust funds, an examination he said was initiated in response to a series of abuses made public over the past several years.

The most notorious case occurred in 1986 when a trust fund at Westfield State College was used to buy the silence of a student who had accused the college president of sexual harassment. Other reported abuses included charges funds were used by college administrators and their spouses for private travel and were used for political contributions.

Terry Zoulas, a spokesman for the Board of Regents of Higher Education, said the board, under the leadership of its chairman, former US Sen. Paul Tsongas, has already taken steps to correct some of the problems DeNucci pointed out, and welcomed the audit.

DeNucci said more than $1.1 billion was spent from trust funds during the 1987 bookkeeping year, and of that total $550 million, or 47 percent, was not subject to the state's accounting and reporting systems.

"As a result of these deficiencies, these trust funds, which are composed of student fees, reimbursements, private and corporate donations, plus federal and state scholarship funds, are off the books and, therefore, beyond the control of the state," the auditors said.

Zoulas said a special commission appointed by Tsongas already has developed uniform regulations for the entire system and are working with the state comptroller to put the trust funds on the state's recordkeeping system.

He also said the trust funds are important to public higher education.

"For example, they fund one of the best teaching hospitals in the country, the UMass Medical Center. They fund many research programs at UMass/Amherst," Zoulas said.

DeNucci said in addition to inadequate accounting and administrative controls, many colleges have created independent foundations that raise private money and shield some activities from regulatory and oversight agencies, including the auditor.

"These organizations use a state college's name to raise funds and in some cases are operated by college staff. They should therefore be subject to the same monitoring as other college trust fund activities," he said.

Zoulas said the Regents have recommended to each state college and university that the either allow the state auditor to examine the books of the independent foundations or that they hire a private accounting firm to do so.

Zoulas said the foundations are important to public colleges and universities because, given the state's financial crunch, more effort will have to be made to raise private money.

DeNucci said the audit was a systemic review, rather than an examination of individual transactions.

He said it found colleges and universities had directed money from its authorized purposes, spent funds for operations without budgetary guidance from the Board of regents and retained income that should have been handed over to the state.

Hey, almost all add/drop hell is over, for better or worse anyway. Some notes to help you avoid more paperwork:

September 19th is the last day to drop without getting a "W" on your record; October 3rd is the last day to drop with one. If you pre-registered for a class that you decided not to take, make sure you drop it; don't count on the professor to do it. If you don't, you'll end up having to do a never attended form, which means signatures, tracking down professors and T.A.s, and general red tape.

The budget cuts are disgustingly obvious. I wanted to take an intensive Latin class and an advanced French conversational class. Neither exist any more. Beaucoup de raspberries to our elected state leaders!

Everyone ought know that it ain't just the Duke who is to blame for this situation, though he is majorly responsible. You see the state legislators knew about the impending fiscal crisis last year too. But they didn't want to hurt the Duke's chances for president.(But it t'wasn't because they like him.)

Now as to Barney Frank: He made a mistake, a bad one. He admitted his mistake openly. This is hell of a lot more than most politicians do. Did you know Senator Kennedy was found, ahem, in the act, under a table in a posh restaurant?

It seems former President Reagan has just had fluid removed from his cranial cavity. This I would assume would hinder his ability to function, somewhat, at least. And I used to wonder why he acted like someone who couldn't find his way from his bed to his bureau. I feel better now that I understand why he made so many dumb comments when he was running the country.

Here's the stupid question of the week, and if I hear it one more time I think I will barf. "When you were in France, like, were all your classes in French?" . . . Of course not! They were in Hebrew. Ugh!!!

Quote of the week:"There is perhaps only one place where it is socially acceptable for a human being to give in to all his primal urges while driving an automobile: Boston, Massachusetts." — The Boston Driver's Handbook: Wild In The Streets.

Just so ya know I grew up in Boston, and learned to drive there. I have a car here at school . . . heh heh heh.

But enough silliness. I have to be serious right now. This week I had to attend a memorial Mass for a good friend, Freya Batlle. No two ways about it, it stunk. Freya was a wonderful person who always made me laugh. I shall never forget her smile and the way her eyes sparkled. I think I can speak for everyone when I say Nous nous souvenirons - We will remember.

Until next week, not quite as happy, happy valley, peace.

Praise, not criticism now needed

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst was highlighted on the front page of Sunday's Boston Globe as being "anything but impressive." The Globe's usual one-sided journalism was fueled by our provost who was quoted as saying "Anybody's got to be an idiot not to go (to UCal/Davis or UCal/Berkeley) instead of here. They'd be an idiot." Provost O'Brien also stated whereas the University had the opportunity to achieve great things, "now it's headed toward being a small, regional, low class institution."

Fellow UMass students, faculty, and staff - we're talking about the institution which you chose to be a part of. You probably didn't make that choice based on the University's financial stability, but more than likely because of our rich mix of people and opportunities; because of the academic excellence; because it's a fun place to be; because it offers a realistic, yet supportive, training ground for life; or for a variety of other reasons that still exist.

Yes, we are facing a financial crisis, but it seems to me it's up to all of us to pull together and share with our state legislators, the Globe, and the provost what's good about this institution. Supporting a ship that's making headway seems to be a much more worthwhile cause than supporting one that is almost underwater. Negative PR hasn't generated more state funding, created much self-esteem, or instilled much confidence within the general public. Maybe accentuating our strengths could.

Thanks to the University Store

Entering the Textbook Annex, I sighed because I knew what would be waiting — thousands of people like myself, buying books.

Once through the check-out line, everyone grabs a plastic University Store bag to carry their precious books. No one really thinks about where the thousands of bags will go. Probably to the landfills to be covered with dirt to lay there for eternity.

No one thinks about what might be happening to the environment, just by buying school books. Fortunately for us, the University Store did think about it. Each of these thousands of plastic bags are biodegradable and the printing on it is done with water soluble inks. Amazing - someone really does care.

It's refreshing to discover that while most students don't care enough to go without a bag, the University Store cared enough to make sure that our children won't have to see that little red logo sticking out of the dirt.

Sensational possibilities

Being a senior, people often ask me what I plan to do with my glorious life when I graduate from the University of Massachusetts.

Jim Clark

Although my paltry class experience qualifies me for little more than mowing lawns, I've gotten my fair share of work in the newspaper field and hope to continue that in the "real world."

As for what kind of publication I'd like to work for, that answer didn't come to me until last week, when I was struck with inspiration while waiting in the express line at Super Stop & Shop.

"THIS MAN GAVE BIRTH TO A 7-LB. BABY GIRL!" the headline screamed at me. Naturally it caught my attention, this proclamation in 80-point bold type.

Immediately the thoughts began to race through my head. Recalling the birds and the bees and every biology lesson I ever slept through, something told me this wasn't anatomically possible. I was stunned, but only for a moment, when the journalistic side of me took over.

"What a story this is," I thought. "How could the Boston Globe, New York Times, or Newsweek possibly have missed this?"

I knew I was on to something. Anyone can write for those "bland" newspapers, covering the State House, public schools or whatever. Those stories are easy. This . . . this is where the action is, I thought. I want in on it.

So after paying for my macaroni and cheese, powdered fruit punch and Pop Tarts, I picked up a copy of this sacred journal, forked over the 70 cents (that's it? Seventy cents for such prized information?), and rushed home to enlighten myself on what "really is going on in the world today."

Instead of being treated to such humdrum news about President Bush, the New York mayoral election or how the Dead Sox are going down faster than Jimmy Hoffa, I get the "inside scoop."

There are newspapers today that try to push this kind of journalism. Such fine publications as the Rupert Murdoch chronicles (Boston Herald and New York Post) and the Toronto Sun (which often runs full-page color pictures of bikini-clad women on page 3) make noble efforts, but let's face it. Even Bob Woodward never came up with anything like this.

So I read on, and I became engrossed in what I saw:

"Could Stan Laurel be Clint Eastwood's Daddy (go 'head Ollie, make my day)?"

"Is my 5-year-old a reincarnation of Elvis (and was he seen strutting in a shopping mall outside of Regina, Saskatchewan last weekend)?"

"Bride weds dead groom and takes corpse on honeymoon (I'm sure Dad loved this one)."

"Fisherman hooked for animal cruelty (Great, let's put all the eskimos in jail for assault)."

"Nurses disgusted when docs guzzle baby's spinal fluid (sorry, I'm not touching this one)."

You get my point. What is the Los Angeles Times doing when these stories happen? Where's Dan Rather? How about Geraldo (oops, bad analogy)?

Anyway, I can just imagine my first day on the job with this newspaper. The managing editor calls me over to his desk:

"Jim, I've got a good one for ya. How 'bout it?"

"Oh, great. What a story. Thanks, boss," I reply with glee.

After days of research and interrogation, I file my first story. "200 foot lizard terrorizes Nebraska town."

Shortly thereafter, there is great clamor throughout the journalism world.

"Young reporter wins Pulitzer Prize."

It could happen . . . in the "real" world of journalism.

Leave me alone to "drink"

As a student living in one of the many residence halls on campus, I am troubled by the fact that I cannot walk down the hall to consult with a friend about my chemistry work with an open diet Coke in my hand.

Melissa Macauly

I realize that this University is "cracking down" on students as far as the drinking policy is concerned, but this is carrying things a bit too far. The "open container" policy is a good idea, but it needs some revision.

A Residential Assistant reprimanded one of my friends for carrying an open soda in the hallway. I find this ludicrous. If an R.A. believes that a student is drinking — via the old "just pour it in a soda can and no one will ever know" trick — or the student smells like alcohol, a write-up is in order.

But to be unduly harassed for drinking a wholesome glass of orange juice in the lounge while taking a break from studying is a violation of what I believe to be our rights as students.

Off campus, the police are not allowed to harass people in this manner without probable cause. Don't we deserve the same amount of fairness and respect?

I realize that the University has to have some way of preventing blatant disregard for the drinking policy; and previously, carrying an open soda or paper cup was a loophole in their expansive system. What about the students who are not looking for a way to beat the system, but who are merely thirsty?

If I were required to attend the new R.E.A.P. (Residential Education Alcohol Program) after walking down my hall with an open soda, I would definitely protest. The R.E.A.P. program costs fifty dollars and is mandatory after some first-time drinking offenses, and after every second drinking offense.

Let's say that I were required to attend the R.E.A.P. program for being "caught" twice with an open container on my floor. As a full-time student, I have neither the time nor the patience to deal with the University bureaucracy. I'm sure that many of my peers would rather not spend their free time in this manner, either.

Unfortunately, I'm sure that there are people on campus who will experience similar problems, even though they don't deserve the hassle. It will probably take someone who is very vocal and wrongly accused before a revision of this "open container" policy transpires.

What about the easily intimidated freshmen who face this problem? Would s/he stand up for his/her rights in the ominous face of University policy? I doubt it.

When asking around, I found that many people have experienced conflict with this very policy. We are not asking that the "open container" policy be abolished, merely that it be amended and possibly revised. R.A's should exercise more common sense in conjunction with their authority to write people up.

This is addressed to those of you who see the injustice of this policy. If you think it is unfair that you are not being allowed to walk down your hall with an open soda, then say something!

One of the major concerns of this University is harassment, the belief that everyone should be free from harassment. I consider being unjustifiably questioned about a soda can in my hand harassment.

Who's the enemy in our nation's drug war?

So about this war on drugs, who (or what) are we fighting anyway?

The way I see it, there's a host of possible enemies at which United States could funnel its energies:

There are the evil Central American drug lords, who experts say are plotting nasty, PLO-like acts of terrorism in response to President Bush's all out drug war.

Then there are the smugglers. From the Gulf Coast to Nantucket Sound, you never can be too sure what's deep inside the hull of that 30 foot Boston Whaler.

We could also lay the wood to all those little punks hustling crack in the streets of Brooklyn, Harlem, Roxbury, Detroit and Los Angeles. There was a time when a summer day meant lemonade stands, stickball and pockets lined with loose change. Nowadays, some kids are lining their pockets with $100 bills, and stickball takes a back seat to peddling "base" out of the corner of the local playground.

What about the mafia? Enough state and local governments are tainted by organized crime that we can't be too sure who's on our side.

Then there's the enemy within. Ourselves. It's not just the inner-city poor folks who are getting hooked, look no further than the major sports pages to find that out. There would be no problem with drugs if there wasn't a demand for them. Simple economics, right?

Cosmo Macero Jr.

The bottom line is, before we pump a truckload of money into this "war on drugs," we should figure out exactly what we're fighting. A field of leafy coca plants is harmless. But mash a few up, suck out the juice, dry it up into rock form, reduce it to powder and gift wrap it, and you've got yourself a powerful little package. Somewhere along the path, it's doing a lot of damage. But is blind funding the way to fight a war?

A Few Miscellaneous Thoughts To Ponder

- Physical Plant electrician Edward Augliano recently found a wallet containing over $300 in cash. Upon turning it over to his supervisor, the billfold was promptly returned to its rightful owner. Let's hear it for honesty.
- Local mixologist Fran T. Conroy posed this question to students early last week: "How come the only people that go out around here anymore have all graduated?" Well . . . how about it?
- Residents of 15 North Pleasant St. this week expressed their dismay at the University's decision to block off the infamous "trip-step" that has traditionally plagued unsuspecting freshman and transfer students as they climb the stairs between the Curtain Theater and the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The treacherous area is now boarded off, preventing any further mishaps. According to one student, the constant flow of trips and stumbles were a form of entertainment for spectators as they rested between classes by the Campus Pond.

"First, they took away our booze," he said, "then they took away our funding . . . now, they've taken away trip-step. What's next?"

The simplicity of childhood

I saw a news program the other day that brought back some great memories. The reporter was interviewing a kindergarten class.

Remember those days?! Everything was so simple back then. I remember coloring, learning to write my name and playing in the sandbox. These activities may now seem trivial, but at the time were significant parts of my life.

Minu Sebastian

I was content going to school, being with my friends and learning the alphabet. Life was good and easy to understand. But then things changed.

I started to get older. Simple things could not make me happy anymore. As a teenager, I can remember feeling the pressure to have the right clothes, the right appearance and the right friends.

People became less easy to talk to. They started to move, breathe, and socialize in cliques. It became increasingly difficult to be yourself. Your actions became based on what is expected of your particular clique. As a child, sitting in the sandbox at school, I do not recall ever judging a person by what his/her reputation was or what he/she was wearing.

As I got older and came to college, some people appeared a bit more mature. But there are still times when I feel like I never left high school. It has become harder to trust people, meet people and talk to people. Sometimes people can be so shallow and petty.

We have become increasingly concerned with our futures. There are so many decisions to make: What career do I want? How much money will I make? Will I be able to support myself? To answer these questions, we start to live and base our lives on our future. We take certain classes, join certain clubs and make our name known to "important" people.

It is important to think and plan for the future. But whatever happened to enjoying each day? Playing outside at recess, milk and cookies every afternoon and bike riding until supper time used to be life's greatest pleasures. Now I am lucky if I have a few idle moments to myself. And even when I do have some free time, in the back of my mind, I know there is something I should be doing.

They say as you grow older, you become wiser. Now that we are older, are we wiser or more narrow-minded and cynical?

As children, we felt free to talk to and be with whomever we wanted, but somehow this all became lost. As the years went by, we became more conscious of our race, religion and sex. We started to judge people through stereotypes based on these factors.

"YOU TAKE SESAME STREET— I'LL TAKE MR. ROGER'S NEIGHBORHOOD!"

Minorities are often looked at as being "different"because of their skin color and cultural background. People of diverse religions also have preconceptions of each other. And if you are a male or female, you have a particular role to fulfill. If you are a male you might feel pressure to be unemotional, strong and successful. If you are a female, you might feel pressure to be feminine, attractive and independent.

These stereotypes separate and restrict people. Instead of being ourselves, we often rationalize our actions and behavior based on stereotypical images and prejudices.

When I was young, I never judged people by their race, religion or sex. Everyone was a unique person. Our minds were free from distorting images of people that might refrain us from interacting with them.

As children we were taught basic concepts. Share everything, play fair, be kind to others and say you are sorry if you hurt somebody. These were the guidelines by which we were taught to live.

What happened to these guidelines? Why did things change? Have we become the people that we were taught so long ago not to become?

As I long for the innocence and freedom of my younger years, I can't help but wonder . . . can life ever be that simple again?

It's time to get involved in the crisis around us

For many of us here at the University of Massachusetts, the basic question isn't "Is UMass in trouble?" but rather, "What can we do to help?"

Eric Nakajima

With the complexity of our state's budgetary problems and the harsh interplay of Massachusetts politics, it is easy to wonder what we can accomplish.

It is tough to see how you can ask for more University funds, when so many in this state have been hurt by the budget crisis. Health care and research have been cut. Fundamental services to the poor or disadvantaged are in doubt, and they are pushing them farther away from the advantages of this prosperous society. After a decade of national concern over drugs, family values and the quality of our earth and atmosphere have fallen to the anti-tax panic.

We face a time of doubt as to the relative value of our University. Each of the troubles that we've just explored are cuts at this University. Potential transfers from community colleges will be locked out next semester: almost 600 to 700 students. We cannot match our needs in basic research or counseling to those in trouble.

We have programs at this University that help to clean up our oceans, and explore the boundaries of current knowledge — they too have been cut.

This University is not just an agency fighting for crumbs, it is a living part of all that we dream of for the future, and demand from our present.

We face a sleep of conscience in every part of our state. Our principles and concerns are adrift amidst the disjointed gods of our time: home property and the bottom line.

We are a campus of intelligence and compassion. Our numbers hail from every part of the Commonwealth, and it is to these places that we must return.

We must write to our hometown newspapers and civic leaders, so that they can see the condition of our schools.

We must network with builders in the trades, and the teachers in our schools — so they can see that we care.

Finally, we must register to vote, such that everyone who now wishes to hold the reigns of power in this state will do so with an eye toward our concerns.

Get involved! There are many ways, large and small that you can help the University's cause. The effort does not take much time — only a great deal of caring and concern.

Come to the budget crisis forum and rally today at 12 noon. It is in the Student Union Ballroom and will feature Senator John Olver, Representative Stan Rosenberg and every major part of this campus community. Faculty, staff and graduate students will be present. We, the undergraduates, must be heard. Our numbers dwindle, but we are still strong.

We can make a difference — if you get involved.

Eric Nakajima is the Student Trustee

The splendor of love has finally been found

I fell in love this summer.

It came before my walls, unannounced, and bravely knocked on the fortress door. It swept over me like a soothing breeze that cools the endless rage of the sun. It weaved and danced its way through my armor of wounded memories and crippling fears.

Josh Galitsky

I don't fully understand it, but perhaps I am not supposed to. It is simply the most difficult joy I have ever experienced.

The world becomes a very different place when you are in love with someone. It becomes almost infinite in the beauty you behold even in the smallest of places. It also becomes frightening in its cruelty and fragility. Logic and reason become silly friends that you accept but do not revere. All that you are becomes vulnerable to another human being, a nakedness akin to nothing else in this world.

When you are together, two lives intertwine, mold and recreate themselves into something even more wondrous. It feels intense. It feels magical. You don't recognize that you are working and striving to survive and to flourish. You just enjoy giving.

Everything simply feels right.

When you are apart, the effort, the struggle shows itself vividly. You battle yourself mostly, and the thousand faces of strangers who don't seem to understand.

Doubts and insecurities become prey for loneliness and pessimism. Words magnify in meaning and phone calls become life lines. Love is tested and re-tested and the survivors are the victors for life.

I fell in love this summer and I carry this person inside me wherever I am.

A piece of me is somewhere far away from here . . . too far. But I have never been so committed to anything in my world as I am to making this gift I have received work.

In a time and place of quitting and moving on, I have chosen to stay, with my enemies eye-to-eye and my allies by my side.

Some may deem me "fool" but they have either never been in love or have been in love, yet have forgotten its beauty.

What hasn't been written or spoken about love?

It is everything good, yet it is not definable. It is so real, yet so infinitely intangible. It forever lives two lives - one of contradiction and one of truth. It dazzles with complexity and majesty, but it also smiles with human simplicity. Love is like some great spectrum that encompasses all colors and emotions and shines one magnificent light upon humanity.

If you are in love . . . hold on. Not with gripping, choking hands but with faith and hope and lots of laughter.

If you have never been in love . . . it will find you and you will know all.

If you have loved and lost . . . pray that you may heal and discover love again, for through all that you know, it had to be worth everything just to have experienced it.

For if love isn't worth it, I know of no other injustice as that and no greater hell in this world.

And if it is worth it, I know of no better way to rejoice in and celebrate this mystery of being human.

VINCENT NAMED BASEBALL COMMISSIONER — Fay Vincent is chosen to succeed the late A. Bartlett Giamatti who died Sept. 1 of a heart attack.

Vincent elected as new baseball commissioner

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Fay Vincent was elected baseball commissioner yesterday, less than two weeks after A. Bartlett Giamatti died of a heart attack.

Vincent, 51, had been deputy commissioner under Giamatti. His election was recommended Tuesday during a meeting of baseball's executive council, which had been running the sport since Giamatti's death Sept. 1.

"I take this job. I do not replace Bart. I know that this is not the way to get this job," Vincent said at a news conference.

Vincent, who was given the unofficial title of acting commissioner by the executive council on Sept. 2, will serve the remaining 4½ years of Giamatti's term, through April 1, 1994. He is baseball's eighth commissioner.

He spoke of Giamatti's agenda at the news conference.

"I think Bart had it just right. I think the transition ought to be relatively seamless," Vincent said. "There's very likely to be a deputy commissioner. I don't have any candidates in mind."

On the subject of Pete Rose being allowed to apply for reinstatement after one year, Vincent refused to discuss hypothetical situations and said: "That application, should it arise, will be dealt with in light of the circumstances at the time."

Vincent's first announcement was to reveal that in memory of Giamatti the players will wear black armbands at the World Series and the balls used will carry Giamatti's signature.

ARTS & LIVING

New jazz release from Coleman disciple

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

This summer was a dry spell for jazz album releases, especially because most of the consistently-fine independent and European import labels were idle. However, a welcome surprise was A&M Records' new Modern Masters Jazz series, which consists of new efforts by innovators of the recent past. The most noteworthy of these is trumpeter Don Cherry's Art Deco.

Valley Jazz

Cherry gained instant notoriety as part of Ornette Coleman's revolutionary late-1950's quartet. This group demolished the boundaries of jazz with its liberated concepts of tonality and rhythm. Its 1960 release, Free Jazz, set the standard for the adventurous musicians of the decade to come and lent a name to their movement.

Cherry's compact, brittle sound on his "pocket trumpet" (a smaller version of the standard instrument) blended perfectly with Coleman's wailing, bluesy alto sax. Apart from that, however, Cherry's contribution to that quartet's overall sound is debatable. The conception was Coleman's; Cherry has adopted it for his own purposes ever since. One of the directions his post-Coleman career has taken has been to try to recreate the quartet's sound with the original rhythm section and various saxophonists.

Art Deco is Cherry's latest effort in this vein. The original rhythm section is present: Charlie Haden on bass and Billy Higgins on drums — certainly one of the finest rhythm sections of the modern era. This time, the saxophonist is James Clay, a relatively unknown figure who was part of the 1950's Forth Worth scene that spawned Coleman. As Clay himself admits in the liner notes, he is a mainstream "Texas tenor" player, meaning that he comes out of the tradition of such hard-edged, bluesy players from the Lone Star State as Illinois Jacquet and Arnett Cobb. This tradition dates back to the 1940's, and thus is in sharp contrast to the supposedly "revolutionary" stance of Cherry and his Coleman cohorts. So, on the surface, it seems that Cherry has hired someone more for his geographical than his musical kinship with Coleman.

Clay does in fact live up to his own description. His sound is gruff and heavy, obviously influenced by his Texas predecessors, but with a sparseness that is particularly effective on ballads. The album consists of a mixture of standards, old Coleman tunes, and a couple of new tunes Cherry wrote for the date; Clay fits in stylistically on the standards but does not give the Coleman tunes the idiosyncratic treatments they have received at the hands of more adventurous players.

Clay attracts the most attention as a soloist on this album, mainly because Cherry's uniformly mid-tempo, middle-register offerings are rather unexciting. Below the surface, however, Haden and Higgins make their usual strong contributions. Higgins, in particular, shows that he is a master of subtle invention — he can make more music with a pair of brushes than most drummers can with any equipment at all. The overall feel is solid and swinging, yet leisurely.

These players are no longer out to shatter any musical boundaries; anyone expecting a breakthrough on the order of the classic Coleman dates is bound to be disappointed. However, Cherry and company may have done something more important with Art Deco: by linking up Coleman's music with tunes from jazz's "standard repertoire" and with a transitional Texas tenor player like Clay, they may have nudged the notion of "traditional jazz" a bit forward.

Visit Uncle Martha for true R & B

By W.J. GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff

One of the few good things that came out of the L'oasis club in Northampton was what came to be known as the blues jam. While the club died the death that all lousy managing brings, a few bands did emerge from the weekly musical free for all and the blues jam survived to continue giving all bluesy musicians a venue for their talents at the vastly superior Pearl St. club. One of the better, and certainly blusier, bands to emerge from that scene is Uncle Martha.

The group is a little over a year old, having started up in July 1988 after meeting at L'oasis. They are, according to some, "the hottest and hippest blues band in the valley", and while a few bands might disagree, it is indisputable that Uncle Martha is one of the most tradition-rooted blues bands in the area. They are "swinging R & B with an edge" according to the band's trombonist, Rob Skelton. They're also fresher than most any young local bands around in that they inject that "edge" into a number of tunes by such staples as Etta James, Wilson Picket and B.B. King.

Pat Robbins and Laura Faye keep the beat respectively on bass and drums, while Dan Valenti plays sax, along with Skelton on trombone and harp. The band is led by Dave "Guitar Martha" Murphy who belts, wails, and feels the songs out. The material is so far comprised of almost all covers, but these are covers the group knows well enough to play for five hours straight, as they discovered by playing all over the place, most notably at the Saloon in Troy, N.Y.

Tight, fresh, professional blues will be playing at Sheehan's Cafe tonight and at Twister's Tavern on Saturday, courtesy of Uncle Martha. They're rhythm and blues you can dance to.

Flat Stanley is full of fun

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Are you sick of having "socially conscious" bands shove their political beliefs down your throat? Are you sick of bands that crank their amps up to eleven and try to make your eardrums bleed?

PREVIEW

Are you sick of Bon Jovi, Cher, Poison, and MTV queen Paula Abdul?

Do you just wanna have fun?

Then get your body on down to the Hatch tonight and give a listen to Flat Stanley, one of the Valley's most distinctive bands.

The band, who took their name from a children's book, promises to deliver the best in everything, from funk and reggae to hard rock. They put their mark on the wide range of covers they perform, from Jimmy Cliff's "The Harder They Come," to the Talking Heads' "Burning Down the House," to a version of Robert Cray's "Phone Booth" that betters that of Eric Clapton.

Many of their covers, including the Rolling Stones "Sympathy For the Devil" and The Who's "Eminence Front," have added surprises that add to the classic songs' appeals.

Their original material easily holds its weight against these classics. From the driving "E-Funk," to the bluesy "She Makes Me Wait," Flat Stanley brings their usual blend of humor and musical expertise to every song.

Formed in February 1988, the five-member band, consisting of mostly UMass alumni, boasts James Eastman on guitar and vocals, Karl von Kries on keyboards and flute, the energetic Matt Coffey on guitar, Peter Childs on bass, and the eighteen-year-old Eric Gentle on drums.

The two guitarists, Eastman and Coffey, differ greatly in their guitar styles. Coffey plays in a blues style, while Eastman plays more in the melodic, Jerry Garcia vein. The two styles compliment each other brilliantly.

The band has been touring all summer, and recently played to over a thousand people at the Hyannis Street Festival. "It was all the usual last minute stuff," said von Kries. "It was like 'Where's my guitar?' 'Where's the stage?' It was straight out of Spinal Tap.

"But it went over really well. This little kid was jumping around jamming out. He was like a little Freddie Mercury, strutting and posing. The crowd was really ready for us because all the earlier stuff was speed-thrash, so we were a good contrast."

Jon Bowser, a local favorite from the band Strong Waters, has promised to come down and jam with the boys tonight. Last year, without the aid of Bowser, Flat Stanley sold out the Hatch. So even though admission is free, get there early to make sure you catch these guys.

When you leave, your ears won't be bleeding, your mind won't be altered, but your mouth will be smiling.

N.W.A. - rap to dance to ... not think about

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

More or less surviving the violence of Compton, L.A., one of America's troubled occupied areas, come N.W.A. A vicious quartet formed by Eazy-E, who also founded the band's Ruthless Records label, which was funded, according to rumor, by laundered funds and from drug money that came from being on good terms with the dopeman. Eazy-E is doing damage to the rap world with Dr. Dre (you may have seen him as a VJ on YO! MTV RAPS), Ice Cube and MC Ren. Their album Straight Outta Compton has gone double platinum. It's the funniest, most entertaining rap record since that 1985 Beastie Boys thing.

The best track on the LP is the classic "Fuck The Police," a song long overdue. After certain unfortunate judicial circumstances, it's a must for the repeat button on your CD player. Tastefully written, MC Ren's arrangements are well timed and creative. The song is about the discrimination of the police against inner-city Black youth, of which 90/are suspected of being involved with gang/drug related activity - ("Searchin' my car lookin' for the product/ Thinkin' every nigger is sellin' narcotics"). It evolves around a courtroom drama theme, an idea convieniently ripped-off from Public Enemy's "Can I Git a Witness," in which a cop is tried and then convicted of being a "White-bred, red-neck, chicken-shit mutha' fucka'." It leaves you on the floor in stitches, or ready for an evening of introducing your shotgun to unsuspecting passers-by on the street.

"Gangsta Gangsta" makes L.L. Cool J's supposed ghetto rap literally sound like crap. If it's real life violence you want, this is it. It's a catchy tune — MC Ren does KRS-I a number and samples the hell out of them — cut-in with little snatches of Betty-X's speeches bitches up a storm with lines like, "He'll just call you a low-life Mutha' Fucka', and talk about your funky ways." The way she delivers those lines is freaky — she's even more frightning than N.W.A themselves. "Dopeman" is a fatal version of the UMass drug scene, to the point account of the gang related drug war. It's a harsh song. Dr. Dre raps about the money- hungry fiends who stupidly involve themselves with crack: "You need a nigger with money so you git a dopeman/pushin' that rock as much as much as you can/ You love the dopeman 'cause he's so rich/ and you ain't nothin' but a dopeman's bitch." I'm not throwing these lyrics out to offend anyone; I feel it's important to give you a sample of what, right now, is the hottest thing in rap. If you haven't heard it yet, check it out, but remember, don't take this stuff too seriously. After all, the world has too many Richard Wrights as it is.

Apart from its entertainment value, "Straight Outta Compton" also serves as a document of ghetto life. This LP manages to give its listeners a glimpse of what it's like, not just in L.A., but in other troubled inner-cities as well. Some might find the constant referral to women as "bitches" offensive. However, to clarify, the women they're describing are the money-hungry ones that are too strung out to get lives or minds of their own.

N.W.A. have often been compared to Public Enemy, and had P.E actually broken-up there might have been a good chance that they could've taken their place. But N.W.A are vastly different in message and ethics; they tell it how it is and conclude that it's hopeless, yet they wouldn't have it any other way. Though we can only hear modernizations of Machiavellian pillaging for so long and it is my prediction that N.W.A will re-route their anger, and become more valuable to the rap-world by promoting education and the unification of the Black community without abandoning their crass attitudes or their coarse humor.

On the whole "Straight Outta Compton" is a great night out with drink, friends and CD player. It's easy to get offended by it and hard to take seriously. This is serious slammin'!

Milk carton dioxins will be reduced to safe level

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration and the nation's paper industry say cancer-causing dioxins in milk cartons are being reduced to a virtually untraceable level.

"We expect . . . that dioxin contamination of paper milk cartons will be effectively eliminated in the very near future," James S. Benson, the FDA's acting deputy administrator, told a House panel Friday.

"They haven't finished the job, but they're definitely moving in that direction," Benson said.

The House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health and the environment was told that only one of the six US paper mills that make the cartons, the Potlatch Corp. mill at Lewiston, Idaho, is still making polyethylene-coated cardboard with traces of dioxin high enough to measurably contaminate milk.

Dioxin is the most potent carcinogenic chemical compound ever tested in laboratory animals, although it has never been shown to cause cancer in humans.

Red Cavaney, president of the American Paper Institute, said Potlatch had reduced the dioxin level of its milk cartons by 46 percent in the last year and that the five other plants had cut it by as much as 90 percent.

The FDA reported last week that tests indicated that dioxin had leached into milk from four of 15 sampled half-pint cartons produced by the six mills.

Benson estimated the risk of getting cancer from drinking milk dioxin-contaminated milk cartons over a lifetime at less than 5 in 1 million.

Subcommittee Chairman Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., said he wouldn't be satisfied until all avoidable dioxin had been eliminated from milk cartons as well as a wide variety of other paper products, including disposable diapers, toilet paper, coffee filters, tea bags, and TV dinners.

"There is continuing scientific disagreement over some characteristics of the dioxin risk, but no one believes that avoidable exposure to dioxin is acceptable," Waxman said.

Benson said the FDA had not completed its studies into the possible migration of dioxin traces from other paper products into food.

"We believe the manufacturing changes now in progress will reduce, if not eliminate, this source of these compounds in food," he said. "We thought milk was the most important, so that's why we started there."

Dioxin makes its way into paper products through chlorine bleaching to whiten and strengthen the material.

Dioxin has never been shown to have caused cancer in humans, but the animal studies have raised concerns among scientists. In high doses, dioxin has been proved to cause acne and some studies have suggested it can also contribute to reproductive disorders.

Cavaney said laboratory tests of milk carton samples taken from the six mills in early summer showed only the Potlatch plant's board had a dioxin level above the measurable threshold of 2 parts per trillion.

He said the plant is in the midst of a $145 million improvement program to reduce the dioxin traces to well below the threshold by the end of 1990.

Samples were taken from International Paper Co.'s plant at Texarkana, TX, whose Framingham, MA plant supplies milk cartons to Pioneer Daily in Westfield, which supplies milk to the University of Massachusetts.

Cavaney said that although these samples measured at 2 ppt, changes in International Paper Co.'s production methods will reduce the dioxin content of its paper milk cartons to below the threshold by the end of this year.

He said the four mills producing 75 percent of the nation's paper cartons with dioxin contents too low to cause any measurable contamination are: International Paper at Pine Bluff, AK; a Weyerhaeuser Co. facility at Longview, WA.; Champion International Corp.'s Canton, NC plant; and Westvaco Corp.'s plant at Covington.

Fast foods are really fat foods; study says health nuts are misguided

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — Would you believe that a fast food chicken sandwich contains as much fat as one and one-half pints of ice cream?

That a half dozen chicken nuggets are fattier than a hamburger? Or that a fried fish sandwich with cheese and a side of fries contains nine teaspoons of fat?

A committee of the Massachusetts Medical Society believes many health-conscious people opt for chicken and fish when they eat fast food in the mistaken belief that they are doing themselves a nutritional favor. It has compiled statistics about the pitfalls of these and other menu choices to back up its proposals for wider disclosure of what's in fast food.

Fish and chicken, for instance, are usually considered to be relatively low-fat alternatives to meat. And prepared correctly, they are. But in the hands of fast-food cooks, fish and chicken can be boobytrapped with vast amounts of hidden fat.

Among the society's guidelines:

- Reveal the type and quantity of fat in food, as well as the amount of protein, vitamins, and minerals.
- Provide printed menus for people who want to restrict their intake of salt, calories or fat.
- Identify the nutrient content of items on salad bars, especially such selections as potato salad and dressings.
- Offer such alternatives as low-fat or skim milk, margarine, low-fat salad dressings and whole-grain buns.

The report was written for the society's nutrition committee by Connie Roberts, a dietician at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. It was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"I find that my clients and patients are very well aware of the recommendation to include more fish and chicken in their diets," Roberts said. "In their natural state, they are indeed much lower in saturated fat and total fat than red meats. Unfortunately, what we forget when the order is placed is the method of preparation that goes into chicken sandwiches and chicken nuggets."

"Many people are quite surprised to find that the total fat in a single hamburger may be 13 grams but six chicken nuggets may have 20 grams of fat," she added. "In contrast, a fish sandwich, by the time it's coated and has a slice of cheese and sauce, is up to 25 grams of fat."

In fairness to the fast-food industry, the report notes that nutrient-poor, fat-filled food can also be found at home, in high-priced restaurants and in school cafeterias. However, because so many people eat fast food, one-fifth of all Americans every day, the medical profession should be concerned about its effect on health and nutrition.

The report noted that in general, fast food is high in fat, salt and protein but low in fiber, vitamins and other nutrients.

Among specifics, gathered from a variety of research:

- Between 40 percent and 55 percent of calories in most fast-food meals come from fat. Several health organizations recommend that no more than 30 percent of the day's calories come from fat.
- Chicken nuggets and chicken-patty sandwiches are often made with chicken skin, which is high in fat. They also may be cooked in beef tallow or in vegetable oil that's high in saturated fat.
- Six chicken nuggets have 310 calories, and nearly 60 percent of the calories from fat.
- A double hamburger with sauce, milkshake and regular-size French fries contain 1,275 calories. That's between half and 80 percent of the recommended daily calories for a woman under age 50.
- A typical fast-food sandwich contains between 700 and 900 milligrams of sodium. Some of them, such as a cheeseburger with bacon, may exceed the entire recommended daily allowance.

Roberts said many doctors and other health workers are reluctant to simply tell patients to stay away from fast food.

"They realize that's impractical advice," she said. "We do better if we train our patients about what to order when they go into a fast food restaurant."

Study: despite Valdez, 1989 just an average year for major oil spills

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Even though the largest oil spill in US history and four other tanker accidents occurred in the first six months of 1989, it has not been an unusual year in terms of the number of major spills, according to a 10-year study by an industry watchdog.

There have been 79 spills of more than 10,000 gallons of oil in US waters since 1978, an average of more than six each year, according to Richard Golob, publisher of Golob's Oil Pollution Bulletin.

Seven of the spills involved more than 1 million gallons, Golob said.

The study, a draft of which was obtained by The Associated Press yesterday, indicates "that although massive catastrophic spills can cause extensive environmental and economic damage, they take place rarely," Golob said.

"Even though the Exxon/Valdez scandal has received so much publicity, and even though we had a record three major spills in one 12-hour period in June which once again reinforced the perception that major oil spills take place frequently, the statistics still show that major spills are still low probability events," Golob said.

The study also reports that more oil was spilled in the first six months of 1989 than in any of the last 10 years and that typically a single spill will account for more than 50 percent of the total volume spilled in a year.

For example: the more than 10.9 million gallons of crude spilled by the Exon Valdez in Prince William Sound, Alaska, accounted for more than 93 percent spilled so far this year.

The volume of oil spilled each year ranged from a low of two spills in 1982 to a high of 16 tanker spills in 1979, "and it appears that the number of tanker spills per year has dropped over the past five years," Golob said.

There were 42 major spills from 1978 through 1982, and 37 spills from 1983 through the first six months of this year.

The Gulf Coast suffered 37 of the spills, the Atlantic Coast 29 and 3 were along the Pacific Coast. There were none in the Great Lakes, Golob said.

Artist flashes a moon

By ANDRE BUSI
Collegian Correspondent

The term "Syzygy" means the alignment of three or more celestial bodies. At the Hamden Gallery, the bodies in question are nine round paintings offering a retrospective of the work of James Hendricks for the past twenty years. This consists of both his paintings of the moon and imaginary planets from around 1969 to his recent ventures into Abstract Expressionism.

Hendricks' career has taken him as far away as Korea. As a teacher and visiting artist at the Seoul Instituite for the Arts, as well as many other schools around America, and his work has been included in museums such as the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, the Smithsonian Institute and the National Air and Space Museum. His commissioned work at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration helps explain his attraction to objects in the sky. Where a spokesman for NASA compared a photo of the lunar surface to a pepperoni pizza, Hendricks saw a work of art.

It's almost ironic that Hendricks' later work embraces Abstract Expressionism — the movement that once and for all stepped on the "box of illusion" that modern painting had been trying to put behind itself for so long. His "tondo" (meaning round) paintings are anything but boxes, but their resemblence to planets and other worlds, the swirling chaos and brilliant sprays of color which suggest the clusters of stars and the depth of galaxies, and the shimmering comet-like arcs that leap across the canvas, are almost representations as much as the earlier moon paintings. But the first word is still abstract in the tradition of action painting, with big gulps of pigment rolling their tongues out across the canvas, desperately trying to lap up its contents.

The nine planets in our solar system converge for only a moment every several decades, but Hendricks' Syzygy will run from September 11 through October 1. The opening reception is today from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m., and the public is invited.

UPC announces the Waterboys

UPC has announced that the Waterboys, who have scored hits with "Whole of the Moon" and "Fisherman's Blues," the title track from their latest album, have been scheduled to play the Fine Arts Center on October 21, with an as yet unidentified opening act.

Tickets will be on sale on Wednesday, September 20. They will be available at Tix Unlimited, For the Record in Amherst and Main Street Records in Northampton. Prices are $7 for UMass students and $10 for the general public.

Music, food, frolic and cows: Catch them all at the Big E

By NICHOLAS OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

The summer is not over. If you feel crowded by the campus walls and are seeking some diverse sights, smells and sounds, then motor out to Interstate 91 South to West Springfield anyday or night between now and September 24. The 68th annual Eastern States Exposition, the biggest in the East, is rocking the region with information and education, but mostly entertainment.

Headlining this year's entertainment lineup is the Big E Circus under the Big Top. The one ring old fashioned big top features flying trapeze artists, elephants, bareback horse riders and performing sea lions, as well as clowns, a circus band and a singing ringmistress.

Joie Chitwood's Thrill Show promises "some of the most daring and terrifying automobile and motorcycle stunts ever performed." In addition, a stuntman in a special firesuit will be set on fire. Bring your own marshmallows.

Gold-winning gymnast Kurt Thomas and his troupe of six gymnasts will perform three times a day with a presentation of gymnastics, dance and comedy.

On a more serious note, there is the compelling, politically volatile, Scraps of Life : Chilean Arpilleras. The exhibit, which consists of 41 appliqued and hand-embroidered tapestries, depicts food shortages, censorship, beatings, detention and unexplained deaths in vibrant color. These symbols of resistence began in 1974, when a group of women from the shanty towns of Santiago, wove their woeful reality as well as their stories of hope, in scraps of cloth.

Equally moving is GRACE (Grass Roots and and Community Effort), a critically acclaimed project consisting of 95 paintings, some never shown publicly, by 33 artists from Vermont's Northeast Kingdom region. Several of the artists are developmentally disabled, suffering from Alzheimer's Disease or arthritis.

Both "Scraps of Life" and "Grace," along with lacework by women of Columbia and winning exhibits from Crafts Adventure '89, will be featured in the New England Center.

On the lighter side, Conklin's Magic Midway features 50 amusement rides (for kids and adults), games of skill and chance, a carousel and a giant slide.

Happy Harry, a bewildering full-featured, life-size puppet/robot, which pedals a tricycle, waves, shakes hands, tells jokes and sings, will titillate those with a proclivity for science. It even hears and responds to questions.

In Freihofer's Petting Zoo, you can relish exotic birds, a giraffe, a camel and an elephant. In the Young Building, you can view cows being milked, baby chickens hatch, and discover many breeds of cattle, sheep, and goats in the "largest livestock show in the East."

The Eastern States Horse Show, a favorite among fairgoers, attracts more than 500 horses and their riders from all over the United States. Free music includes Philadelphia's Ferko String Band, a popular mummers contingent composed of musicians playing banjo, violins, saxophones, bass fiddles, accordian, percussion and cello, ranging in age from 16 to 70.

Atchafalaya raises the dust with a heel-kicking set of tunes steeped in a pungent cauldron of cajun, country, rock and bluegrass. In the past, they have shared the stage with Bonnie Raitt and Heart. Catch them at Milk's Musical Caravan Stage daily at 1:30 p.m., 3:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

Country superstar Tanya Tucker gives six performances, Setember 22-24 at 3 and 6:30 p.m.

Other musicians performing throughout the week include the country band Canyon, accordionist Myron Floren, German oom-pah band, the Saurkrauts and the United States Field Band Volunteers.

The Four Preps, responsible for thirty top-20 hits, including "Why Do Fools Fall in Love?" and "Put Your Head on My Shoulder," will also be performing on September 19-24.

Admission to the Big E is $6.00. You can ride all the amusements on the Magic Midway with a special discount package for $7.00.

A grand parade commences at the Avenue of States every day at 4:30 p.m., and features marching bands, floats, cartoon characters and other surprises.

The fair is expected to employ almost 3,000 local residents, gross over $40 million and make over one million people very happy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A search for something at a distance requires persistence. Teamwork holds special appeal when an attractive member of the opposite sex is involved. Proceed with cautious optimism.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.22): Your expertise can be used to great advantage in community work. Remain in the public eye; you are very much in demand. Be certain you understand an older person's feelings before making changes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are developing new talents and being well paid for that expertise. You sense your partner's secrets. Be patient until this person is ready to reveal the inner heart. Renew a friendship.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Show more caution when it comes to borrowing or lending money. Be alert to double meanings when dealing with competitors. The news from loved ones living overseas is reassuring.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Schedules are subject to change today. Your willingness to accommodate others endears you to them. Contact people who can help you get ahead. A long-distance romance works surprisingly well.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Behind your every effort is one objective: to improve the lot of others. You reach a new milestone where your career is concerned. Share the spotlight with those closest to your heart.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Use diplomacy if family members or work associates are obstinate. Teamwork helps to swell profits. Being honest with a close friend pays big dividends. Better communication will improve romance.

Look out Columbia, here comes Fitchburg State

Div. III football team holds nation-long 32-game losing streak

FITCHBURG (AP) — The Fitchburg State Falcons have lost everything except their love for football.

The hapless Falcons have won just one game since beginning varsity play in 1984 and their losing streak of 32 games is currently the worst mark in the nation. But the coach still says "it's fun," and the student body, which raises money to field the team, voted overwhelmingly to keep the Falcons playing.

"You have to love football to play at Fitchburg State," explained starting center Dan Marrash, a 24-year-old nursing student with a 3.2 grade point average. He concedes it can get discouraging, even for a 6-foot-1, 260-pound ex-Marine, "but we keep after each other. And someday, somehow we know we are going to win."

For this is Division III football with no scholarships, part-time coaches, bouncing bus rides over the New England hills and sometimes few rewards, except a chance to play the game.

"The only recruiting is you go up to coach and say you want to play," said sophomore quarterback Rich LeBlanc.

"Of course everyone dreams of getting the game ball when we finally break the streak," LeBlanc said. "If I do, I'll give it to the coaches. They've worked so hard and tried so hard all these years, without getting down that we can't. And all the guys who played for us and never got to win."

The last and only time the Falcons have won in 44 outings came on Sept. 21, 1985, when they managed to down New York Maritime, 28-23. Although it has since resumed play, New York Maritime did not field a team the following season.

But even after last year's 0-9 season, when the Falcons managed 141 net yards rushing — advancing 602 yards and being pushed back 461 yards over the course of a season in which they scored 20 points and their opponents 239 — the 3,200 students at the central Massachusetts school voted by an 88-percent margin to continue picking up the football budget of about $30,000.

"They are young men of uncommon courage," said College President Vincent Mara. "The kids are just determined to hang tough and grit it out. And if they are willing to make that kind of effort, we're not going to do anything to stop them."

"I don't know whether I'm a born optimist," said Dave Secino, the Falcons' only coach, who returned home to run the family tailor shop after playing offensive line for the University of Maine, and sometimes runs up rips in Falcon uniforms. "But I don't get down on the kids. They are on a mission. They know that if they give up, football will disappear at Fitchburg State. And we all know it's not going to be this way forever.

"All I ask is that all 48 try their best and I'm pleased if we can get them to play on a level above themselves, even if we lose," Secino said.

Secino decided to try the wishbone offense this season and in last weekend's opening game, fullback Gary Fountain, a 5-6, 170-pound senior from Methuen shattered Fitchburg State's rushing records by scrambling for 129 yards, including a 60-yard touchdown. For 10 glorious minutes, the Falcons held a 13-12 lead over the University of Lowell. Then Lowell scored 24 unanswered points to prevail, 36-13. Fountain broke his leg, and the Falcons inched closer to Columbia's mark of 34 straight losses, established last year. Division III Macalester still holds the all-time collegiate mark of 50 straight defeats.

On Saturday, the Falcons face perennial Division III power Plymouth State of New Hampshire, which suffered its first home loss to a New England Conference opponent since 1980 last weekend when it was tripped by Bridgewater State, 8-7.

year in the postseason, thus denying UMass the chance to play in the Final Four for the sixth time. Revenge should be the mode of thinking for that all-important matchup.

Short kicks: In the season's first ISAA Division I poll, Massachusetts was ranked tenth, dropping four notches after the initial 1-1 weekend . . . Scattered among the top twenty slots in the poll were such opponents such as Wisconsin (4th) all the way to North Carolina State (2nd) . . . Others include William and Mary (5th), Connecticut (7th), Rutgers (11th), Central Florida (12th), and Hartford (13rd.)

Alan is getting a degree in astrophysics. Someone's got to tell him-- after graduation, the next stop is Earth.

He's going to discover that there's quite a lot happening on this planet, in politics, in the arts and theater. In business, as well as in science.

Of course, if Alan had been getting The New York Times, he'd have done all the required reading necessary for re-entry to the real world. He'd be ready to talk with the natives, to live among them and to enjoy himself.

It's not too late for you to avoid Alan's fate. Just fill out the coupon below, or see our representative on campus. We'll arrange to put The Times in your hands every morning for what you'll consider a remarkably down-to-earth price.

Yes, I want to know what's happening in the rest of the world. I want to be surprised, amused and informed every day. In short, I want campus delivery of The New York Times. And I want it at your ridiculous low student price that's only half the newsstand rate. Please give me all the details...fast.

"are going to play a much bigger role on this team than in the past. I like to bring the freshmen along slowly, but this group is going to have to be put to the test pretty early. It's like the old saying goes, 'It's going to be a real baptism under fire.' "

The three freshmen that O'Brien feels are ready to make instant impacts all carry impressive resumes.

Matt Simon of Lexington High is a 4:14 miler, which was Massachusetts' fastest for a high schooler last year.

Pat Reed of Taconic High in nearby Pittsfield placed seventh in the Massachusetts state cross country championships as a junior, while playing the bridesmaid last year.

Mike Davis of Peoples Academy in Morrisville, VT, was the Green Mountain state champ as a senior, as well as the fourth place finisher at the New England championships that same year in perhaps the toughest field ever assembled.

BC and Yale are formidable tests for this possibly lethal UMass combination of wiley veterans and hungry freshmen, ones that O'Brien feels his squad is up to passing.

"BC is returning four of its top five from a team that finished fifth at New England's," said O'Brien. "And Yale always starts the season strong, so there won't be any breathing room for us. I think we might be a notch above Yale and I'd like to think we'll really go after Boston College. BC has the edge on paper, but I really like our chances with the kids we have."

challenging for the number one spot."

The team's first meet will provide one of the season's toughest challenges. Yale has "slipped" from third in the nation in 1986 down to seventh in '88. Despite the decline, all things remain relative and Yale remains a daunting opponent.

Although not at Yale's level, Boston College presents a formidable challenge also. UMass has never beaten BC head-to-head and LaFreniere makes no promises this year, at least not for the early part of the season.

"With Precious in peak shape, we'd have a better chance. If we don't beat them now, we'll have a good shot in the New England Championships," LaFreniere said.

Although BC has had a strong cross country team for the past 10 years, it is not a program on the rise.

"They lost their two best runners and didn't have a great year recruiting. They didn't bring in any big guns this year," LaFreniere said.

Last year, the team lost its first meet to Yale and BC and then went undefeated the rest of the dual meet season to finish with a 6-2 record. Quite an improvement from 1987, when the team won but one meet.

LaFreniere is forthright in stating that her team is at a deficit against Yale and BC.

"Both of those schools have a budget which provides for two weeks of preseason training," she said. "We didn't start practicing until the beginning week of school (Sept. 4)."

Along with today's meet, LaFreniere has also added Providence College, one of the top teams in the nation, to the schedule. She adheres to the age-old adage of competition: "If you don't run against the best, you really don't know how good you are."

Today's meet will tell a lot.

Unfortunately for BC, the Eagles cannot make the same claim. Boston College made mistakes in its own end that cost them 11 penalty corners, as opposed to UMass giving the Eagles seven corners.

One player in particular that BC did not mark well enough was senior midfielder Kathy DeAngelis. And when you don't mark DeAngelis, she makes you pay. DeAngelis, who has led the Minutewomen in scoring for the past two years, scored both goals, her second and third of the season, to take over the team lead.

The first goal of the game came on a breakaway at 24:21 of the first half as DeAngelis walked in on BC goalie Lisa Ostapko and beat the sophomore for the only goal in the fast-moving first half.

"I thought we started great the first 15 minutes or so," Hixon said. "A lot of offense, a lot of running, a lot of fast breaks. That's what we're looking for but you can't do that for 70 minutes."

The attack may have slowed down for the Minutewomen but the Eagles could not generate any offense of its own, and went into halftime down 1-0.

"I thought we played very well and then we let down," junior defender Kim Hannigan said. "We just weren't moving the ball."

Still though, the stagnant BC offense was still hanging around, only down 1-0.

The Eagles hung in there until there were less than 11 minutes left in the game before the Minutewomen caught a sudden burst of the energy like the one that invigorated them in the opening minutes and DeAngelis struck again.

At half-field, freshman midfielder Sherlan Cabralis split two BC defenders with a pass directed to junior forward Beth Thornton who had slipped behind most of the BC defense along the right sideline. Thornton continued down the right side, before dumping a pass in front of the net to DeAngelis, whose initial shot was stopped. But the rebound trickled right back to DeAngelis, and she tapped it into the net, giving the Minutewomen one insurance goal that they ended up not even needing.

The longest singles match was for the second singles win between Minuteman Paul Audet and Jason Forbes. Audie, as he's affectionately called by his teammates, raked in a 7-5 score in the first set. Listening to the two make grunts of concentration proved that neither player was willing to back down. After some great rallies, Audet pulled out a 6-4 second set score to win for the Minutemen.

Other singles wins came from No. 4 Rich Stone (6-1, 6-1), No. 5 Lloyd Teitelbaum (6-0, 6-0) and No. 6 Chris Johnson (6-2, 6-2).

The doubles matches were all incredible. At third, Stone and Hechemy, alias serve and volley respectively, played extremely well together in their intense match. The two rallied their opponents to a 6-1, 6-3 win.

The only loss from the Minutemen came at second doubles, with Johnson and Teitelbaum losing a tough match. As the spectators, or what was left of them, watched the marching band walk back from practice, the team began its third set.

After some down-the-line shots and cross court put-aways, Johnson and Teitelbaum found themselves playing a tiebreaker against their opponents. But the coin was in favor of Franklin Pierce, which won the match, 6-1, 3-6, 7-6 (7-5).

The Minutemen take to the road tomorrow to play the University of New Hampshire.

Field hockey team sends Eagles flying

DeAngelis scores twice; Minutewomen win second

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The way that University of Massachusetts coach Pam Hixon has handled her goaltenders this year is illogical to the outside observer. On Saturday, Hixon chose to start sophomore Lisa Charron, who has a lot more experience on grass fields, on the artificial turf in Springfield.

Yesterday, Hixon went with freshman Phillipa Scott, who is used to the carpet, on Totman Field's natural grass. You can't argue with the results though. After yesterday's 2-0 win over Boston College in UMass' home opener, the Minutewomen are 2-0.

Actually, everything is pretty rational though.

"I just think that both of them have to play well on both surfaces," Hixon said. "And I wanted to see how Scotty would play with our new defense."

Play she did, but not very much. With the new defense shutting down the Eagles for just six shots in the game, Scott had a pretty easy day, only having to make five saves in her first collegiate performance.

"I feel good now that I've played a game," Scott said. "I felt OK. I have confidence in the people that play in front of me."

Most of the defensive unit in front of her, however, was getting used to new positions. Kerri Fagan was at the sweeper after having played center back on Saturday, Bernie Martel at left back, and senior co-captain Carol Smith was on the other side at right back.

"I thought the defense was much better today," Smith said. "But we didn't get tested that much. Our marking was much better."

Women's soccer tripped by UVM

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team dropped a tough 1-0 loss on the road to the University of Vermont, dipping their season record to 1-2 and under the .500 mark for the second time this year.

"This one was pretty tough to swallow," said head coach Jim Rudy. "We came out flat and we didn't play well. It was one of those days."

Part of the problem was simply getting onto the field, as the team bus was late leaving and arriving, leaving little time for an adequate warmup.

Both teams were scoreless until seven minutes into the second half, when Vermont got a throw-in from the sideline. That's when Christine Goodman performed her circus-like act, the "flip-flop," a somersault flip and throw.

Her toss was long and accurate enough to get to Cheryl Reid, who headed the ball past UMass keeper Mary Curtis for the game's only score.

Rudy said that his defense wasn't allowed to properly adjust to the play by the referee. Rudy said the problem was "we couldn't block the ball at the source."

The Reds reverted to a pressure cooker-like offense, pulling the sweeper and adding an extra forward to the attack with 15 minutes left. "We gave it to them at the end but it was too late," said Rudy. "We played the last 10 minutes like it was World War III." But even that would not work against a team that seemed to have had all the breaks on their home field.

"We hit the post, then blocked one over the crossbar on an open net," said Rudy. "The referee gave us no breaks today. [April] Kater got taken down in the box and there was no call. Several of the girls complained about missed handballs."

One of the continual problems continued to be finishing off plays. In the first half, Lisa Mickelson had beaten her defender and just had to beat the keeper Joey Fritz (13 saves), but she could not convert. Freshman Kim Eynard, whose bench contributions are being felt, still continues to make some rookie mistakes though, according to Rudy. "She still shoots when she's suppose to pass and pass when she's suppose to shoot."

Rudy also went to Leanne Swartz and Tracy Arwood off the bench toward the end of the first half to replace some tired starters.

"Give them credit," said Rudy. "They gambled with their [offensive] style coming out of the back."

Rudy's defensive plan was to pressure the keeper and the Vermont defenders with a triangle of forwards, eventually forcing the ball to be played by the left fullback, who would be left unmarked. Then Vermont's offensive options would be cut down and more predictable.

Rudy said his defense was able to shut their offense down to an extent in the second half, but when they did, UMass was not sharp enough to capitalize.

Next for UMass will be another away-from-home encounter at Cornell against the Big Red on Saturday and then it's none other than Wisconsin Sunday. If one recalls correctly, it was the Badgers who defeated the Reds last

Men's tennis cruises, 8-1

Dumps Franklin Pierce

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

Franklin Pierce College didn't have the sharpness to pop the winning force of the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team in their match yesterday, as the Minutemen took an 8-1 victory.

In one of only two home meets for the season, the Minutemen (2-0) were winners for the second day in a row.

UMass began the meet by consecutively winning all six matches. At the number one slot, Barry Wadsworth, the team's new acquisition from Penn State, dragged in a popsicle stick score, 6-1, 6-1 over George Obidiegwn, Franklin Pierce's first singles player. Shall we say he "licked" him, but good. Wadsworth's service winners and cross court volleys, along with his cool head eased him into his second win of the season.

Another newcomer, freshman Jeff Hechemy at third singles, swept in a 6-2, 6-1 win over opponent Sean Rich. Hechemy's unfamiliarity to UMass hasn't hindered his smart moves on the court. His game was interesting because he took a cross court approach, and a good one at that. Practically every point he hit cross court, he won.

Cross country teams to kick off schedule today

●Minutemen to face Yale, Boston College

By JON REIDEL
Collegian Staff

When the curtain opens for the University of Massachusetts men's cross country team's season today at Franklin Park in Boston against Boston College and Yale University, the team will be counting heavily on a group of understudies to fill in the loss of two of its leading cast members.

With J.J. Millette, one of New England's top runners, and Gerry Squires sitting out a year, the Minutemen will be counting on Art Smith, last year's consistent number three man, and Herb Hefner, also a proven frontrunner from last year, to assume the head roles.

John Corso, who head coach Ken O'Brien cites as having an excellent summer of training, might also join his two running mates at the front pack, but due to a virus will have to wait until a later date to prove himself.

With the top five spots uncertain, it would seem that today's meet against one of New England's best at BC, might be a good indicator of either a long hard season ahead or one of success.

O'Brien, however, feels he has enough proven upperclassmen to go up against most other programs.

"The upperclass kids have been around long enough," said O'Brien. "So that I have enough confidence in them to know that they can do real well."

Two seniors who should be among this "upperclass" group are Joe Livorsi, known as the team's toughest trainer, and James Chute, a 4:14 miler.

It is the freshmen, however, who could have the most dramatic impact today and probably more so throughout the rest of the year.

"I think the freshmen," said O'Brien,

●Sophomore Hill returns to bolster women

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts women's cross country coach Julie LaFreniere received a definite boost two weeks ago when she learned that sophomore star Precious Hill was returning to school and to the cross country course.

Although Hill had not had any serious training for about four months before returning, LaFreniere stated plainly, "Precious out of shape is a better runner than most people in shape. She'll beat a lot of people."

Hill and the rest of the Minutewomen will find out a lot about their season this afternoon when they open against national power Yale and Boston College at Boston's Franklin Park.

The return of Hill, the number two freshman in the ECAC championships last season, will bolster an already strong nucleus. After a week of practice, LaFreniere has seen some pleasant surprises which should help her team to a successful season.

LaFreniere's biggest bonus thus far has been the performance of sophomore Tara Hughes, in her first year of cross country. She expressed interest in joining the team last spring, and after a hard summer of training has brought a smile to LaFreniere's face.

"It's not very often you can find someone who just walks in and can run long distance," LaFreniere said. "She has a great background after running some 10- and 12-mile races this summer."

Freshman Becky Johnson has shown no qualms about running at the front of the pack. According to LaFreniere, Johnson has "great potential. Until Precious gets into top shape, she'll be

Fresh with anger and frustration sparked by the recent wave of budget cuts, some 500 students, faculty and staff crowded into the Student Union ballroom yesterday to form a united front against further curtailments of public higher education.

The rally, which lasted nearly two hours, evoked emotions ranging from grim silence to a standing ovation in reaction to speeches from a seven-person panel headed by rally organizer Student Trustee Eric Nakajima.

The rally immediately followed a press conference held in the Dukes Room in the Student Union Building announcing the official formation of the Leadership Coalition, a group of faculty, staff and students who are uniting to fight further cutbacks.

On the panel were Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst; Rep. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst; Professor John Cole; Cynthia Kaufman of the Graduate Employees Organization; Jonathan Leavitt, a member of People for a Socially Responsible University, a student activist group; and Professor Tom Coish of the Legal Services Office.

Nakajima urged students to retaliate against the "anti-

B'nai B'rith lauds University coalition

A Black-Jewish Coalition and Multicultural Ally Network which merged last year to form the University of Massachusetts program, "Building Coalitions Out Conflict," has won national acclaim for the campus Hillel Foundation.

The program, which evolved after last year's controversial visit by Minister Louis Farrakhan, the leader of the Nation of Islam, is one of three in the nation to receive the annual William Haber Award from the Washington-based national B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation.

The citation marks the third William Haber Award Hillel has received since the award was established in 1976.

"We are one of only two or three organizations who have ever won this award this many times," said UMass Hillel Director Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

A Passover seder, created by the Multicultural Ally Network, took place last spring as part of the program, to help improve relations between the two ethnic groups, according to Alison Buckholtz, last semester's external affairs coordinator.

The event was attended by more than 80 students of various ethnic backgrounds, many of whom were student group leaders, she said.

Students from groups such as the Asian American Students Association, the Everywoman's Center and the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance joined with others to write the seder's hagaddah, which included each group's struggle against oppression, Buckholtz said.

"Passover is about freedom for any minority escaping oppression," she said. "I saw a positive result at the time of the Passover seder because it allowed everyone to see how similar they were to everyone else and that everyone wanted to live in peace."

Buckholtz said the conflict which arose on campus surrounding Farrakhan's visit was not restricted to those members of the community who are Black or Jewish.

Perlmutter agreed. "There were a lot of hurt feelings upon the visit of Louis Farrakhan on many sides and many people realized a need to hear one

Quality of freshmen up

Dean says UMass is more selective

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Boasting a high academic capability and a record-setting level of cultural diversity at the University of Massachusetts, the class of 1993 represents an upward trend in the quality of students despite lower enrollment, according to the admissions office.

Associate Dean of Admissions Karen Copetas said the average Scholastic Aptitude Test scores for this year's freshman class — some 3,800 students — is 1,054 combined math and verbal test results.

The figure, which ranks the class some 150 points above the national average, surpasses the average score for freshmen entering UMass five years ago by 57 points, she said.

The number of self-reported minority students has also risen two percent since 1984, a record for the University, she said.

"The UMass image is being clarified in the Commonwealth. The ZooMass image is not the key thing," Copetas said. "Four years ago people would say, 'Why go there?' That's not what people are saying now. They're saying, 'Wow! This is a good education!'"

The overall number of students graduating from high schools across the country decreased this year, resulting in a 20 percent dip in the number of University applicants, Copetas said.

But this decrease was not evident in the quality of the applicants, she said, pointing out that this year's freshmen have stronger qualifications for enrollment than last year's.

This year, 75 percent of all in-state applicants were accepted, jumping 12 percent from 1989. Acceptance of out-of-state applications increased slightly from 33 to 34 percent.

As there are fewer graduating high school seniors and fewer students applying to college, UMass will continue to "downsize" its future classes, she said.

A factor related to this changing admissions process is the personal statement, a new essay section of the UMass application, she said.

"I think the essay has prevented those types of students who had no desire to come to UMass, but just happened to pick up the application in their high school guidance office, from applying,' Copetas said.

Expert warns about greenhouse effect

BY KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Correspondent

This is the first in an occasional series of articles focusing on the environmental issues now being discussed in a three-week colloquy at Hampshire College.

Only immediate international cooperation will change the production of ozone destroying gases, but policy makers have not set an agenda to address this threat, according to environmentalist Arjun Makhijani.

Makhijani, from the Institute for Energy and Environmental Research, spoke to an audience of about 60 people on "International Action on Global Warning" at Hampshire College Wednesday night.

His presentation was the second in Hampshire College's Fall colloquy, "Restoring the Earth: Strategies for a Just and Sustainable Future."

Makhijani said, "The international community must stop taking a 'postemortem' approach to the inseparable problems of ozone depletion and global warming within 10 years to merely stabilize the greenhouse effect."

The greenhouse effect is a global warming trend, a direct result of a depletion of the ozone layer by gases.

Makhijani listed the following "greenhouse gases": carbon dioxide, from fossil fuel emissions; CFC's (chlorofluorocarbons) from aerosols, refrigerators, and car air conditioners; methane from landfills and decomposition of sewerage, and nitrous oxides from fertilizers.

Chambers-Smith concede to Turner in C.A.G. race

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Robb Smith and Ted Chambers, co-candidates in last April's Commuter Area Government presidential election, will not be running for the position in the new elections, Chambers said.

The hard work of acting CAG president Clarinda Rose-Turner, the only official working in the commuters' office during the summer, convinced the pair not to run again, Chambers said.

"We basically decided to let her pick up the reins [of CAG]," he added.

Rose-Turner, elected vice-president in the April election, became acting president after the election was disputed.

Alex Zarganes and Tim Reilly won the April election, but Smith and Chambers led a Student Government Association Student Judiciary investigation into illegal voting by at least one member of the Greek area and by some Continuing Education students.

Zarganes has since left the university, leaving CAG to hold new presidential elections regardless of the court's decision.

Chambers blamed the judiciary, which has not yet reached a decision in the case, for the chaos surrounding the elections.

"They've screwed up yet another SGA election," he said, referring to the case involving then SGA co-presidents-elect Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz.

Silkoff and Rabinowitz were prevented from taking office after being elected in March, 1988, because of a clause in the SGA Constitution which did not allow co-presidents.

They filed a suit in the Student Judiciary, claiming the clause did not forbid them from taking office. Their term expired before the case was settled.

Members of the student judiciary could not be reached for comment.

Chambers said he and Smith may run for positions on the CAG Governing Board. Other candidates include former SGA Budgets Committee Chairman Nathan Moore and Brian-James Crawford.

The governing board is responsible for programming, such as the weekly Comedy Night shows, Crawford said. It also helps provide services especially designed for commuters and older students, such as the Off Campus Housing Office and the newly established Undergraduate Child Care Fund, he added.

East, west leaders to discuss global concerns

Cultural destruction is linked to environmental destruction

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Tribal leaders from all over the globe will be joining efforts next week at a local college to save their land and cultures from destruction.

WALKING THE LINE — A construction worker fixes the telephone lines on Central Area hill.

"It is unprecedented to have tribal leaders from both Eastern and Western hemispheres at one conference discussing environmental issues," said Rudi Bach, spokesman for the Rainforest Group.

The conference at Smith College, Sept. 22-24, is entitled "From Arctic to Amazonia: Industrial Nations Exploitation of Tribal Lands."

Coordinated in part by the University of Massachusetts' Rainforest Action Group, the conference is expected to draw tribal leaders from places such as Australia, North Dakota and the Netherlands.

Mark Maynard, president of the group, added that the conference is important because it links "environmental destruction to cultural destruction".

Bach believes that actions need to be taken now, saying that "our future is being held hostage by a chain saw."

"There is concern because our rainforests are being destroyed at such a tremendous rate that in 30 or 40 years there is not going to be enough tropical rainforests for adequate amounts of oxygen and carbon dioxide," Bach said.

Maynard believes that there is much more lost than trees when rainforests are destroyed.

"Looking at it from a humanistic standpoint, if you take away the land and the resources, the people are taken with it," he said.

The Rainforest Action group works toward the protection of tropical rainforests in South America, Central America and elsewhere. The group was formed last semester to counter the destruction of rainforests and also to raise public awareness with speakers, films and basic education regarding this issue.

Maynard believes in educating youths in the community through outreach programs at local elementary schools. This September, the group is involved with an African Rainforest program at Fort River Elementary School in Amherst.

B.O.G. decides to hold off voting on Third World Affairs Office move

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors last night postponed voting on a proposal to relocate the Office of Third World Affairs and five Registered Student Organizations, citing a need for more discussion on the move.

Charlotte Carter, BOG chairwoman, told the board she and BOG Vice Chairwoman Liz Hart met with Office of Third World Affairs Director Sherwood Thompson and members of the Third World Caucus to discuss the relocation, but added that plans are not finalized as of yet.

"There are no communication problems," Carter said. "We just need to hear more about people's feelings about the move."

If the motion passes, the Office of Third World Affairs will move from its current space in room 308 in the Student Union building, which it shares with the Third World Caucus, to the former Student Government Association treasurer's office in Student Union room 407.

The Caucus will remain in room 308 and will share the space with Amnesty International, a human rights group on campus.

In other news:

●The board approved a proposal to extend the deadline for hiring BOG coordinators until Oct. 9. Carter said the extension will allow the board enough time to complete rewriting the coordinators' job descriptions.

Open coordinator positions include BOG Program Council coordinator, who is responsible for organizing concerts and other events in the Student Union and Campus Center.

●Carter also announced official appointments to the board. Ben Eder from the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance and Third World Caucus members Michael Manuel, Elizabeth Dacey and Michelle Joseph were named to the board as governors.

●BOG Program Council Coordinator Jeff Glassman said sponsorship of the Tuesday night Comedy Night in the Hatch will shift from the Commuter Area Government to the Program Council in late October.

Glassman said the change occurred because the shows, while popular, were not attracting enough commuter support to justify CAG's participation.

Co-op extension lays off 52 workers

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

Responding to a budget cutback of more than $1.7 million by Gov. Dukakis, the University of Massachusetts Cooperative Extension today fired nearly half of its statewide staff, according to the associate director of the program.

"Tomorrow is a black day in Cooperative Extension," said Robert Light yesterday. "It's hard for the organization to go forward when so many colleagues have been terminated."

Light said the cooperative provides extension services relating to agriculture, communities, families and young people across the state.

He said 13 of the 52 laid-off workers, who included secretaries and graphic designers, worked in Amherst.

The cooperative should have 150 workers, but is now operating with 70, Light said. Prior to the layoffs, he said, the extension employed about 120 workers.

Significant reductions were also made in the cooperative's home horticulture, community research

SWAPO SPOKESMAN ASSASSINATED — Anton Lubowski, the only white to hold a leadership post in the Southwest Africa People's Organization, was assassinated in Windhoek, Namibia Tuesday.

Nujoma receives a hero's welcome

Namibian guerilla leader to compete for political power

WINDHOEK, Nambia (AP) - Sam Nujoma, leader of the SWAPO guerrilla movement, received a hero's welcome yesterday as he ended 30 years in exile to compete for political power in soon-to-be-independent Namibia.

Tight security measures were in force because of threats on Nujoma's life and the assassination Tuesday of Anton Lubowski, the only white with a leadership post in the South-West Africa People's Organization.

"I'm happy to be home," the 60-year-old nationalist leader said after kissing the tarmac at Windhoek's airport. He embraced SWAPO colleagues and his 89-year-old mother.

Thousands of cheering supporters, kept out of the terminal by police, gathered at the airport gates to greet Nujoma, who led a 23-year bush war against South African rule of the territory.

Most wore the red, blue and green colors of the independence movement.

Black trade unions urged their members to skip work in order to join in welcoming Nujoma, who arrived aboard an Ethiopian Airlines jet after a flight from Luanda, Angola.

Earlier today, police announced the arrest of a suspect in the assassination of Lubowski.

Police Inspector Kierie du Rand said the suspect was a 50-year-old white man with an Irish passport, arrested in Windhoek on Wednesday. He reportedly came to Namibia from Cape Town, South Africa.

The man's name was not released, and du Rand said additional arrests were expected.

Lubowski, 37, was killed by automatic rifle fire outside his Windhoek home Tuesday night. A civil rights lawyer, he was a member of SWAPO's election directorate and helped direct its campaign for U.N.-supervised elections scheduled for early November as a prelude to independence next year.

SWAPO said the assassination of Lubowski was intended to create instability prior to the elections, which SWAPO is widely favored to dominate, and to frighten whites at a time when racial unity is growing.

Agreement anticipated

WASHINGTON (AP) - Barring a last-minute hitch, the United States and the Soviet Union will announce next week a landmark agreement to disclose their stockpiles of chemical weapons and permit inspection of their production facilities.

The emerging accord extends the principle of verification established in a 1987 U.S.-Soviet treaty to scrap all nuclear missiles with a range of 300 to 3,400 miles.

But the United States must first gain the cooperation of West Germany, on whose territory some U.S. chemical weapons are stored, U.S. officials said Wednesday.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze would sign the agreement at their Sept. 2-3 meeting in Jackson Hole, Wyo., while making preparations for a superpower summit.

President Bush will see Shevardnadze in Washington on Sept. 21, an administration official said.

U.S. officials, who disclosed the latest arms control moves, said final details first must be ironed out by U.S. and Soviet experts.

They will meet here next Monday and

U.S. official urges NATO to be cautious

WASHINGTON (AP) - Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger urged the NATO allies Wednesday night to "avoid bankrolling" the Soviet Union until Mikhail Gorbachev's reforms become permanent.

In a major foreign policy speech, Eagleburger also warned against extending trade and arms control concessions to Moscow without "the kind of systematic reforms which alone can make for a stable and confident relationship between East and West."

Eagleburger said President Gorbachev "is no anti-Communist and he intends to make the Soviet Union as strong as he possibly can."

And yet, the U.S. official said, the political and economic reforms Gorbachev is undertaking offer "the first realistic hope for a transformation in the nature of the Soviet system and for a qualitative improvement in East-West relations."

Eagleburger spoke at Georgetown University in a lecture memorializing a former American diplomat, Samuel Berger. Answering questions afterward, the deputy secretary of state also:

de Klerk elected as new president

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) - F.W. de Klerk was elected yesterday to a five-year term as president and pledged to ensure that the voteless black majority "becomes part of the decision-making process."

Aquino to decide on stay of U.S. bases

MANILA, Phillippines (AP) - President Corazon Aquino said yesterday that she will decide whether to allow U.S. military bases to stay after 1991 primarily on Filipino interests rather than regional security concerns.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Mrs. Aquino said she was waiting to hear what Washington was prepared to offer before making her decision on the bases, whose lease expires in September 1991. U.S. Officials claim the bases are essential for maintaining security in the Far East.

Mother Teresa still suffering after illness

CALCUTTA, India (AP) - Mother Teresa had chest pains and developed a high fever today, a week after she suffered a heart attack, her doctors said.

"She suffered chest pains during the night which required intensive measures to relieve. These measures are continuing," Ashim said.

Demjanjuk claims U.S. hid evidence

JERUSALEM (AP) - The Supreme Court granted a defense request Wednesday and postponed an appeal by a convicted Nazi war criminal, enabling his attorney to verify new evidence he claims was covered up by the United States.

The decision on John Demjanjuk's appeal followed a 4 1/2-hour session in which prosecutor Michael Shaked disputed that the Americans had hidden any evidence in the case.

The appeal before the five-justice panel was postponed from Nov. 1 to May 14, 1990.

Demjanjuk, 69, a retired auto worker from the Cleveland suburb of Seven Hills, was found guilty by an Israeli court in April 1988 of crimes against humanity and crimes against the Jewish people. He was sentenced to death.

Demjanjuk was convicted of being a Nazi guard known as "Ivan the Terrible," who switched on the gas chambers in 1942 to 1943 at the Treblinka death camp where 850,000 Jews perished.

But the Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk claims to be a victim of mistaken identity and testified at his trial that he was at two other Nazi prisoner of war camps during that period.

Demjanjuk attorney Yoram Sheftel told the court he had recently received new evidence that could help his client.

These included documents found several weeks ago in a garbage bin across the street from the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations in Washington, Sheftel said. The office investigates alleged Nazi war criminals.

Sheftel said the papers were found after news from an "inside leaker" at the Justice Department. He declined to elaborate on his alleged informant.

One document is a memorandum of an interview with a former Nazi prison guard, Otto Horn, who failed to identify Demjamjuk in a photo lineup, contradicting evidence presented in court, Sheftel said.

The other memorandum, he said, concerned a Treblinka survivor names Rigrodsky, allegedly questioned before a 1981 trial to strip Demjanjuk of U.S. citizenship.

Sheftel said Rigrodsky had recounted being forced to play the violin for officers at the camp, including Demjanjuk, during a period when Demjanjuk was said by other witnesses to have been assigned to another camp.

"The accused is in effect shown in two places at the same time. But the court verdict never referred to this contradiction," Sheftel said.

determine exactly how much information is to be exchanged under the agreement.

"We are close," one official said.

The other key provision calls for short-notice inspection of each other's stockpiles and plants. It is designed as a model for an international treaty now under negotiation by 40 nations in Geneva.

The major sticking point in completing that accord is that the United States believes the Soviet Union has more chemical weapons than it is willing to acknowledge.

"We don't believe the Soviets, but we don't know how to find out how many more they have," an official said. "It's very difficult."

But he said the U.S.-Soviet memorandum is designed to serve as a 'confidence-building' measure that could improve prospects for a 40-nation treaty.

The two superpowers, the only countries to admit possessing chemical weapons, began their negotiations four years ago and have had 12 rounds of talks in Geneva.

Besides the imminent accord, they recently agreed on two provision that could be part of the 40-nation treaty, the official said.

Buckholtz said Hillel is now working toward registering the Black-Jewish Coalition as a Registered Student Organization, where it would be eligible to receive funding from the Student Activities Trust Fund and office space in campus buildings.

"[Greenhouse gases] rise up into the stratosphere to destroy the ozone layer and reflect infrared heat back at the earth," Makhijani said. "A 20 percent depletion in the ozone layer would cause blistering and burns in two hours and a 50 percent stop of world food production."

However, since the CFC's have a half life of 50 to 100 years to remove themselves from the atmosphere, he said that it would take a 75 to 100 percent reduction to simply stabilize their deleterious effects.

"This means whatever is in store for us will happen," he said. "More reductions would be required for restoration."

He cited the Motreal Protocol in September of 1987, where 24 nations agreed to reduce the use of CFC's as as "a hallmark international agreement."

Makhijani criticized the agreement because it does not address the more serious effects of carbon dioxide from energy use on the ozone layer which is responsible for 57 percent of the damage.

He said that China, India, and Brazil, nearly 50 percent of the world population, refused to sign the Montreal Protocol.

"China and India are not environmental Neanderthals," he said. "They wish to have financial compensation to buy the more expensive CFC-less chemicals. Countries with the power, like the U.S. and Japan, told them to screw off."

The next lecture will be held tomorrow at 7 p.m. in Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College. All events are free and open to the public.

development and 4H youth programs, said Light.

"The situation won't improve until the [Dukakis] administration gains a better understanding of the value Cooperatiive Extension has to the people of this state," said Light.

Trish Sacks, assistant director of the Cooperative Extension, said Dukakis vetoed $1,778,000 that had been allocated to this year's cooperative budget, reducing it to $3 million. She said she thinks the large cut is disproportionately unfair to the cooperative.

"I don't think any [other agency] has taken a 371/2 percent reduction in one year," said Sacks.

Sacks said the layoffs will have a devastating effect on the organization's programs, staff and clientele.

Employee kills five

Injures 14, then kills himself

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - A printing company employee blazed away with an assault rifle as he went from floor to floor of the plant yesterday, killing at least five people and wounding 14 before taking his own life, police said.

"It looks like a battle zone ... with the blood and the people involved there," Mayor Jerry Abramson said after touring the three-story building adjacent to The Courier-Journal newspaper offices.

Police searched every floor for victims because of the Standard-Gravure Co. building's many "nooks and crannies," Chief Richard Dotson said. Two victims were found during the mayor's tour.

"We also found a fellow sitting in a corner that was just shuddering in fear," Abramson said. "He hadn't been shot, but he was in shock."

The gunman, Joseph T. Wesbecher, entered the building at 8:30 a.m. with a duffel bag, an AK-47 rifle and a 9mm semi-automatic pistol and randomly fired at people with the rifle, which had ammunition clips of about 25 rounds, Dotson said.

"It started on the first floor. By the time our officers arrived he had gone up to the third floor... and he eventually ended up in a pressroom in an annex area, which is where he killed himself."

Dotson described Wesbecher, 47, as a disgruntled employee of Standard-Gravure, which prints newspaper inserts and Sunday newspaper supplements. He was on permanent disability, although the nature of his disability was not immediately known.

The chief said an officer who knew Wesbecher told him the man had been argumentative and confrontational for a number of years.'

Bill Leezer, a maintenance worker for The Courier-Journal who said he knew Wesbecher, talked to one of the shooting victims. He said the man saw Wesbecher and said,"What are you doing here? You're supposed to be on disability leave." The gunman responded, "Get out of my way. Get out of my way." Wesbecher then shot him.

To all concerned students, faculty and staff:

The Collegian wants and needs staff to fill our Multicultural Affairs page, scheduled for every other Tuesday beginning next week.

Even as the Multicultural Affairs page replaces the Black Affairs page, we at the Collegian wish to make clear that we have not eliminated our Black Affairs desk.

To best serve our readers, the Collegian believes there is a need to highlight the Asian, Hispanic, Native American and other minority communities. The Multicultural Affairs page will focus in on stories regarding these communities, as well as expanding our coverage of the Black community.

But to best be able to cover multicultural affairs, we need any and all interested students to join the Collegian. Students do not need to be journalism majors, nor do they have to be from one of the above communities to contribute to the page.

Any suggestions regarding any aspect of the Collegian, the Multicultural Affairs page or subject matter therein should be brought to David R. Mark, editor in chief, or Cosmo Macero Jr., managing editor. We will make time to meet with anyone in order to best address their concerns.

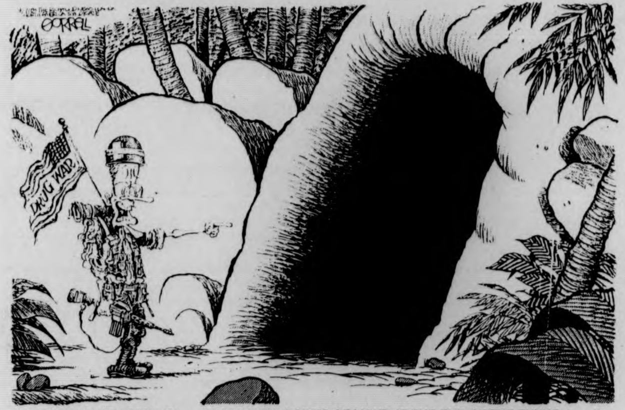
Drugs: America's greatest problem?



"LOOK! DO YOU SEE IT?! . . . A THOUSAND POINTS OF LIGHT AT THE END OF THE TUNNEL! . . ."

In search of a "real" plan

We have all heard George Bush tell us that we live in the greatest nation on earth, just as every president before him. I guess that living here and knowing all of the eternal problems, I sometimes forget the boasting and bragging of our head-of-state.

Over the summer, I met a variety of European students that were awed by the splendor of this country, as well as the high standard of living and chances for opportunity. These students came from different backgrounds, cultures and have traveled through many of the European nations.

Well, I still have to figure out why, if this country is so wonderful, the greatest domestic problem facing us is drugs. Drugs, if I understand, allow the user to forget reality and everything else around him/her. Maybe they like being located two feet off the ground. Maybe living in the greatest nation is just too much for them. Or maybe, life here in the United States is not all that it is rumored to be.

President Bush needs money, about eight billion dollars to get rid of the substances that lead to death, bankruptcy, theft, delinquency and the overall rise in crime. He wants to fight the war on drugs from four standpoints: law enforcement, on and beyond our borders, the classroom and by increasing treatment.

There are some real problems here, because that is a great deal of money.

There are enough difficulties here at home. A Drug Enforcement Agent from Springfield named Eddie O'Brien and his brother John were found trafficking about 117 pounds of cocaine (about $5 million on the streets) and embezzling $147,000 from Uncle Sam.

Great, George wants to send military personnel to Latin America while the agents in our country are selling the drugs they are supposed to confiscate. I have a real great feeling about the effectiveness of our operatives already.

How about educational spending to alert children of the dangers of drugs? Children today are more aware than any generation before. I never knew what pot or cocaine was in the first grade. But kids today know that the slogan "Just say no" is not referring to trading sandwiches at lunchtime.

The President has again requested more money. There are sure to be reactions all around. I looked for the Democratic party to say something, anything, to reassure me that they were on top of the proposed strategy. I read Senator Biden's statement, "Quite frankly, the President's plan is not tough enough, bold enough, or imaginative enough to meet the crisis at hand."

Fine, Senator, but if it is not, as even I agree, then what is? Is that statement your tough, bold and imaginative way to deal with the crisis?

The drug problem has been considered one of the greatest problems facing the nation in history. There have been others, like war, energy shortages, inflation, homelessness and poverty. Problems like these prove that the US is not such a great place to live. But for those that do consider the US a fantastic place to call home, then perhaps the fantastic people of the country can get their fantastic acts together and find a plan to stop drugs.

I wish I was that fantastic.

Columbian perspectives

In recent weeks, Columbia has become the focus of the world's attention — and not for particularly favorable reasons.

As a Columbian, I would like to invite Americans to re-evaluate prevalent assumptions on the subject of drugs and drug trafficking.

Sonia Daccarett

I am deeply concerned about the future of my country, as are most Columbians. The coca plant is just one of the countless other forms of vegetation grown in Columbia.

The plant grew there for centuries, and the indigenous population chewed and utilized it for medicinal purposes with no major problems until the Western world, and especially the United States, discovered it.

Since then, due to its illegality, it has become a fantastically lucrative industry — making Columbian drug dealers wealthy beyond belief. It has allowed them to construct enormous mansions, drive the most luxurious cars, and buy the latest weapon systems to develop some to the most fanatically right-wing paramilitary groups in the history of Columbia.

The dealers corrupt society, which should be concentrating its efforts on escaping crippling poverty and illiteracy, with grotesque and artificial wealth.

Every American who buys cocaine, contributes to the engorged bank accounts of these dealers and the downward spiraling of Columbia.

The drug problem is a problem of supply and demand. There is an enormous and extremely profitable demand for cocaine, which stimulates the illegal production and supply of it.

This is a simple analysis of the problem, which has only one not-so-simple solution: the legalization of drugs in the United States. It is the only way to control the enormous profits to be made from cocaine.

Fighting drugs militarily, by sending American weapons and even troops to Columbia will be futile. It will only aggravate and polarize an already extremely difficult situation.

I realize the legalization of drugs in the United States is unlikely, if not impossible. But if the United States really wants to offer constructive help to at least try to alleviate the situation it should rethink its military stance — instead of paying competitive prices for Columbia's legal exports, coffee, for example.

By providing certain segments of Columbia's society with a way to make a decent living by growing legal crops, the growing and trafficking of drugs may be reduced.

However, the problem will not be solved, and nothing short of legalizing drugs will solve it, which in itself poses another set of complex problems.

This is why I, and many other Columbians, are grieving for our troubled country today.

Sonia Daccarett is a UMass student

Optimistic goal is unreachable

In response to President Bush's proposed strategy for the "War on Drugs," we suggest a new perspective:

Virtually everyone in America would agree with the following three. 1)Put the drug lords out of business so that America does not get enmeshed in yet another military excursion on foreign soil. 2)Put an end to the escalating violence associated with the drug trade. 3)Make the criminal justice system work in a more effective and timely manner.

President Bush's program will not achieve even one of these objectives, calling for immediate involvement of our military on foreign soil (albeit as armed advisors, but didn't Vietnam start that way?)

His program increases law enforcement activity against already out-manned, outgunned police forces. This program of only marginally increased spending in the criminal justice system while apprehending many more drug offenders will further clog an already over-burdened system of criminal justice.

Since it seems a bit crass to criticize Bush's plan without offering an alternative, we suggest a plan that will achieve every one of the above objectives.

If we can momentarily set aside our prejudices, we are led to consider the possibility of complete decriminalization of all drug use. Drastic — yes. But consider, with legislation, the huge profit margins in the drug business will vanish.

With legalization, the killings and muggings associated with the drug gangs and users will diminish because the high profits and costs of drugs are direct results of our law enforcement, legal and penal systems presently engaged in our apparently losing battle against drugs.

We recognize that drug legalization is not a panacea, in particular, it will not eliminate drug use. What it will do is achieve all of our objectives at no cost to the tax-payers. The president's plan, on the other hand, is only the modest beginning of an eventual, massive usurping of tax dollars for the unrealistic goal of reducing (not eliminating) drug use.

This rather optimistic goal is not to be realized until the year 2000, during which time none of our three objectives have any hope of being achieved.

The banishment of drugs will cost us our liberty

Legalize all drugs.

If anything is self-evident from the history of the prohibition on drugs, it's that it has failed miserably.

These may seem like harsh words but they are the words that need to be spoken. Today's politicians lack the will to speak them.

Voting for drug laws are popular. Politicians do what is popular. Laws that attempt to banish drugs from society do so at a great cost to human life, law and order, and individual liberty.

Despite the sincerity of policy makers and lay people, the laws against drug use do far more harm than good. Defenders of drug prohibition use the basic argument for their case: "drugs are dangerous therefore they should be illegal."

This argument would get you a failing grade in Logic 101. It is well documented that legal drugs such as alcohol and tobacco cause far more deaths per year than the illicit types.

There are 390,000 deaths per year due to tobacco related illness. Over 150,000 deaths per year are caused by alcohol consumption. Finally, cocaine and heroin combined account for 3,000 deaths.

The case for drug legalization is two-fold:

First, legalization would remove the crime element from the drug trade. (Note the exodus of organized crime after the repeal of alcohol prohibition.) Secondly, legalization would affirm our American belief in freedom to choose and be held responsible for our own actions.

W. Matthew Whiting

The real danger of illegal drugs is not to the addict but the non-addict. When drugs become legal the prices will drop. Estimates show that street prices of heroin and cocaine are 100 times what their pharmaceutical prices would be. Prohibition has spawned a crime wave that now enthralls the nation. Addicts would be able to buy their drugs just as they do tobacco and liquor. Today many of them mug, rob and kill victims to obtain money to buy drugs at their new inflated prices.

The non-addicts also bear the financial burden of prohibition. Last year $10 billion was spent at the local, state and federal level on the "war on drugs." Illicit drug supply went up, so did crime.

Now President Bush wants to add another $7.9 billion to the drug war. The results are predictable. Throwing good money after bad is senseless and wasteful.

Our society has accepted legal drugs like alcohol, tobacco and caffeine. Drugs like cocaine and heroin were legal prior to the Harrison Act of 1914. Still, the nation was not a crime-infested worker society, but a time of unprecedented growth.

In a free society, it is the role of the government to protect citizens from aggression of others, not their own mores. Under prohibition the government has failed its duty. Prohibition has created the violence the government is supposed to be protecting use form. Addicts need help and care, not two years in jail or AIDS from another infected needle.

Many people speculate drug use would dramatically rise if drugs were legal. There is no sound basis for this claim. During the Reagan years, illicit drug use rose and the drugs themselves became purer.

We as free individuals reserve the right to choose. Even if the choice is self-deprecating. The war on drugs is a moral issue. This is a crude sacrifice at odds with American values.

The war on drugs will come to an end when the public comes to realize the truth about this destructive policy.

tax" panic now sweeping the state by educating the community about the cutbacks and registering to vote in the 1990 state elections.

"We're all here to make sure no one gets locked out of this University," he said. "The University is not just an agency fighting for crumbs, it is a living part of all that we dream of for the future and demand from our present."

Olver and Rosenberg blasted the federal government's disinvestment of public higher education and voiced disapproval of Massachusetts residents' general refusal to approve a tax hike.

"High quality service costs money," Olver said. "In order to reap these benefits, it's necessary to pay for them somewhere along the way."

Rosenberg said Massachusetts has the second lowest tax rate in the country but is 40 percent above the national average in tuition and fees paid by students in public higher education.

He warned taxpayers that they will regret their anti-taxes "temper tantrum."

"When Massachusetts [residents] wake up from this temper tantrum, they are going to be shocked and sadly dismayed at what they have done to themselves," Rosenberg said.

Anthropology Professor John Cole received a standing ovation after a speech in which he asked all faculty members to stand and state the college or university from which they received their Ph.D.

The professors' educational experience ranged from Harvard University to UMass, but Cole pointed out that three-fourths of the faculty present were educated at a public institution.

"We have come here from all over the country to teach," he said. "The notion that a state does not need a public research university is totally foreign to us. We will not put up with the degradation and under funding of the University."

GEO member Cynthia Kaufman and Jonathan Leavitt of the P.S.R.U., which drew national attention last year when the group staged six separate building takeovers to protest Defense Department financed research at the University, also delivered brief statements.

sex, lies and videotape
Hampshire Mall

Writing about a film like sex, lies and videotape is extremely difficult because the film manages to get you completely psyched, hyped, and amped over almost nothing. In short, it's a slick, pretentiously unpretentious, anti-Yuppie wet dream.

FILM REVIEW

I saw the film twice, once in Cambridge, with an uppity, Harvard-educated audience, all of whom enjoyed the film immencely, getting-off on the subtleties of the humor, and the sometimes scarily true to life scenes. Then I saw it at the mall. This is most certainly not a mall movie. Even though the theater was packed, the people were there for one thing and one thing only—sex. And they got horribly dissapointed. Even though the film is about sex, it was all insinuated. The audience, mostly composed of students, were laughing at the stupidest of scenes, and when I laughed at the scenes that were meant to be laughed at, I felt as if I were out of place.

When the movie was over, all I could hear was negative comments, like, "Man, like that film was so dumb. And, like there was no good sex scenes, like, y'know?" I'm sure the director, Steven Soderbergh, would've liked listening to his film being criticized by talking Wonder Bread.

sex, lies and videotape is an outstanding film. Beautifully photographed, perfectly cast and with an excellent script, it's too original to be true. And not to say anything bad about the film quality, but it lives up to Hollywood standards. In other words, it's even more amazing considering it was shot on a budget of $1,200,000, Brian DePalma's lunch money.

I was real cynical of the film at first. The hype was too great, and it beat out Spike Lee's Do the Right Thing at the Cannes Film Festival for best picture of the year. Any film that wins best picture at Cannes I'm immediately leery of. But I must admit that if it wasn't for Spike, I'd hand the award over to Soderbergh on a silver platter.

The film evolves around a rectangle of lust. Cynthia, a barmaid, is kind of a tramp. She has no qualms about expressing herself sexually, in fact, she literally holds nothing back. And she certainly doesn't care that she's having an affair with her sister Ann's husband, John, a conning, kniving, self-centered lawyer.In one scene, he even advises marriage to a friend, claiming that a wedding ring is the key to picking up single women.

Cynthia can make him do almost anything, for in her eye he's a walking penis. At one point in the movie, she forces him to leave an important client. She yells at him to "Get your balls in the air and your butt over here.

Then comes Graham, a cute, drifter type who, despite his beliefs, is impotent except within his own presence. Instead of buying porno mags, his way of releasing himself sexually is to videotape women talking about sex. And because you believe him, he actually talks them into doing it.

Naturally, Cynthia finds out about him, goes to visit him, and masturbates in front of his camera (not Soderbergh's). She is intrigued by him and can't put a finger on

Bootleg T-shirt sellers struggle to keep shirts

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Correspondent

At least once a week it happens—you're asleep, studying, talking on the phone, whatever, when someone peeks into your room and asks, "Hey, would you like to buy a t-shirt?"

It might be the coveted David Letterman-like "Ten Best Excuses at UMass", the standard university "Co-ed Naked Lacrosse" t-shirt, or something with Calvin and Hobbes or Opus on it, but selling in a residence hall is prohibited, according to Larry Moneta, associate director for Residential Education Housing Services.

"We want to spare the student from the hassle of excessive commercial activity in a hall," he said. "With 11,000 students on campus it's quite a captive audience for marketers. Students would be deluged if we didn't put up some barrier.

"There is also the question of fraud. We have problems with this every year," he added.

However, Moneta said under specific conditions it is legal to sell products in the residence halls. For example, fundraisers for RSO's and certain educational purposes such as newspapers are allowed.

However, many t-shirts and other goods, such as towels and cups, are still sold in residence halls. "I didn't know it was illegal until someone told me," said one anonymous t-shirt seller. "But if I don't sell them, I'll be stuck with 300 t-shirts, so what am I going to do?

"I owe my mother $1000 from last semester's tuition," said the junior physics major. "I can pay her back plus make about $200 myself.

"I am concerned about the regulations against selling in the dorms, but again, what am I going to do. My other alternative is selling them on the concourse, but that will cost $15 for the permit plus $16 a day just to set up. That will really start to eat up my profits," she said.

"I also know that selling the 'Wild Things' t-shirts [the t-shirts she is selling] is a copyright infringement, but I have to make money," she said.

"These t-shirts aren't junk. It's a heavy weight shirt with six screens or colors on it," she said of the Where the Wild Things Are, which she sells for $12 a piece or $20 for two.

She did note that the t-shirts are going slow. "I sold a lot the first day, but it has slowed down, probably because there are so many t-shirts being sold on campus," she said.

"I thought this was going to be easy money, but it is a lot of footwork and time," she explained. "I'm starting to doubt whether I'll make a profit after paying my mother."

"I also don't want to wake up anyone, or disturb them from studying, so I only go into rooms with doors open," she said. "I don't knock on closed doors at all. It's probably why I still have about 120 shirts left."

Expect a knock on your door soon.

his impotence, which he never gives a clear explanation for. One of the best scenes is when Ann pops over to see if everything is going well. When she is explained the content of the videotapes, she is dumbfounded, and can't handle it, so she leaves nervously.

Ann is internally restricted, she can't seem to be at peace with herself because of her rigid up-bringing, for which her sister has completely broken away from. She's a lot of fun to laugh at, but you also catch yourself laughing really at her being pathetic. Even more amazing is her transition from Donna Reed-dom to becoming aware of her wanting to become a near shrew.

Eventually she finds out that John and Ann are involved and retaliates by revealing herself to Graham, which (not to spoil the ending) creates an interesting mess.

The joy of sex, lies and videotape is in the performances, especially Graham, played by James Spader, who not only is one of the most attractive screen presences, but manages to lure you into his character so easily that one might not doubt that off character and on character personalities are the same. He's a real marvel.

As for the rest of the characters, they too keep you glued to your seat. You can't take your eyes off them for an instant. I hate to say it, but there's not one flawed scene in the film that would be worth discussion. In short, it's brilliant!

The only flaw with this movie is that it is now being shown in malls. See this movie, but, for your own well being, please don't see it in a mall.

Treat Her Right will be performing at Pearl Street's Ten Below on Saturday night.

Mature Scruffy satisfies, doesn't thrill

Scruffy the Cat is okay.

Everybody who went to Pearl Street last Friday should have recovered by now. The show rated no more than a five day hangover, which is actually pretty good by local standards.

The show opened with an unexpected appearance by the Vestrymen, a prominent local outfit with a bright future. They were an odd accompaniment to Scruffy the Cat, but that's not their fault. They are a good, danceable band with as much dynamic variation in the songs as you can expect from an all guitar group.

Some observant patrons may have noticed Pearl Street now has Leinenkugel's, recently purchased by Miller and now available to discriminating beer drinkers outside Wisconsin, on tap. We hardly noticed the long break between sets.

REVIEW

Scruffy itself was an anomaly. Long tours and late nights in the studio have taught them to pace themselves, and the first half of their set was consciously slowed down, much to the chagrin of longtime fans, who don't mind seeing their idols burn out and die young in exchange for an hour or two of high volume ecstasy.

The lead guitar was lost in the mix, which would have been a disaster, except that keyboard player Burns Stanfiield has been much better integrated into the arrangements over the past year.

His Farfisa, piano and harpsichord parts give the band a depth that can only be found by adding some instrument other than a guitar to the lineup.

Classic covers rounded out a show that, while not the best of Scruffy the Cat, was nevertheless enjoyable.

Emo Philips looks confused

The Emo Philips guide to life

By JIM COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

Although he has been on the comedy scene since 1976 when he played coffee houses, Pizza Huts, and "anywhere with a microphone," comedian Emo Philips, whom, along with commedienne/accordianist Judy Tenuta, will be at John M. Greene Hall at Smith College, tomorrow night at 8 p.m., still does not receive immediate recognition.

So what has Phillips, famous for his pageboy haircut, long face, large eyes and annoyingly squeeky voice been doing for the past dozen years or so?

According to Philips, prior to his break into comedy, he worked as a model at Andy Warhol's infamous Factory at the age of 17. However, the lifestyle at the Factory made him lose sight of reality, and helped him decide to make the jump to comedy. To Philips, comedy seemed the most logical route for him to take, because, as he explained, "Anything Rich Little could get paid for doing, so could I."

Early on, Philips discovered a formula for being a successful stand-up comedian: "If no one laughs within 30 minutes, leave the stage."

Around 1983, his career began to pick up, and since then, he has appeared on Late Night with David Letterman six times, had his own HBO special, cut a couple of records, appeared in an episode of Miami Vice with Phil Collins, and had a brief role as a shop teacher in the summer movie UHF.

Philips also explained that in addition to stand-up comedy, he would like to "be considered mediocre in other areas such as writing or plays, and possibly more movies."

For his upcoming appearence at Smith College with comedienne Judy Tenuta, Philips said that he would be performing, "brand new stuff, peppered with some classic material."

In order for the audience to prepare for his performance, Philips recommends "reading the Illiad and Milton's Paradise Lost."

Of Tenuta, with whom he has appeared on Friday Night Videos, Philips had only one citing, "She is a great person to work with."

Neanderthals thought to be able to speak

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — The setting: a field in Europe. The time: 50,000 years ago. The scene: two giant Neanderthals are standing together when a puny little guy, a Homo sapiens, one of us, walks by. The Neanderthals exchange glances and snicker.

"Say," one says to the other," did you hear the one about the human who thought Neanderthals were dumb?"

So, Homo sapien readers, you think this scene is a fairy tale? You think Neanderthals were giant hairy brutes who stumbled about, managing utterances no more sophisticated than an occasional "ugh" or "duh?"

Think again.

Terrence Deacon, an assistant anthropology professor at Harvard University, says Neanderthal men could talk. He couldn't pronounce the letters "e" or "i," and he probably sounded a bit nasal and hard to understand, but he could communicate.

Neanderthals even may have spun yarns, whispered gossip, and told a few one-liners, Deacon says.

What's more, they may have talked with early humans, and if they did, remnants of Neanderthal language could be found in modern speech.

About 50,000 years ago, Neanderthals living in Europe and Israel were invaded by a race of smaller folk- modern humans who had migrated from Africa. For thousands of years the two cultures mingled, and quite possibly communicated, before Neanderthals died out 35,000 years ago, Deacon said.

Neanderthals "had every bit of the intellectual and linguistic capability" that our direct ancestor did, Deacon said Wednesday. "They could have conversed with modern humans."

Deacon bases this contention on his studies of monkey and human brains. His research showed that an area called the ventral prefrontal cortex, which grew dramatically in modern human brains, serves as a link between speech centers controlling so-called automatic vocalizations, such as laughter and crying, and those areas controlling more sophisticated speech.

The development of this large cortex distinguished humans from primates, which use automatic vocalizations like shrieks and hoots to communicate. Since Neanderthal brains also had a large ventral prefrontal cortex, it is reasonable to assume they could talk, Deacon said.

Neanderthal man was a big guy, to be sure. He had larger bones and muscles, a sloping forehead and more menacing jaws and teeth than todays' average human, but his brain was much like ours. There is no reason he wouldn't have the gift of gab, Deacon said.

He couldn't utter some of the vowels we do, though, because his larynx was higher in his throat than ours. So he couldn't "ooh" if he spied a beautiful full moon, for example.

Philip Lieberman, professor of cognitive and linguistic sciences at Brown University, agreed with some of Deacon's argument.

But Lieberman said that while he'd "be astonished if they didn't talk... whether they spoke anything like humans is an unsettled issue.

"The difference in the vocal tract means the Neanderthal couldn't close has nose off," Lieberman said, noting this would make Neanderthal speech very nasal, which added errors to any language.

Liebreman added that Neanderthal speech also would be hampered by not being able to say "e" or "i," the most common sounds found in modern languages.

Deacon said much of what an anthropologist believes about Neanderthal man's capacities depend upon what is considered crucial to speech.

"It all comes down to what you think is more important for speech: the brain or the larynx," Deacon said. "I believe it is the brain."

Telephone strike expected to end soon

BOSTON (AP) - Talks to end a six-week-old strike by 18,000 New England Telephone workers moved forward Thursday, union officials said.

"We have made headway," said Myles Calvey, head of International Brotherhood of Electric Workers Local 222.

Calvey declined to give specifics about the Thursday morning meeting.

"The company and union have reached a sensitive area of negotiations," he said in a statement. "As long as there's profitable dialogue, we will continue to meet."

Volleyball attempts to rebound at Fairfield tonight

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team, looking to rebound from a opening day loss to the University of Hartford, travels to Fairfield, Conn. to take on Fairfield University today.

UMass has spent the days since their last match regrouping and getting players healthy. Seeing action for the first time will be Rachel Bredemier, a freshman middle hitter, who had been sidelined with a sprained ankle.

Expecting to see increased action will be Susan Richardson, an outside hitter, who saw limited action against Hartford. Richardson is coming off a sprained foot and figures to fit into UMass' offensive plans. "Sue is a good all-around player," said coach Carol Ford.

This is a very young team with three freshmen figuring heavily into the squad's both near and distant future. Richardson, Bredemeier and outside hitter Susan Panoff are all loaded with potential. The team's captain, Nancy Sullivan, is still just a junior and has looked impressive both in practice and in the opening match against Hartford. This match against Fairfield will prove to be a good test to see how the character of the team will develop.

"This is the first time we have scheduled Fairfield. They are about the level of Hartford. We will be looking to take it (our play) up a few notches," Ford said.

Fairfield is a small school with a student population of about 2850 and only nine players on the volleyball team. Of those players, UMass will have to worry most about outside hitter Julie Quinn, who is partially responsible for Fairfield's win in their first match of the year. Quinn had 19 kills. Kim Cagajeski may well be Fairfield's best all-around player. In their only match so far, Cagajeski had seven blocks, eight digs and 11 kills.

Looking to solve some of the problems from the first match, mostly fundamentals, Ford is stressing the basics in practice. "It's still early in the season," Ford said.

"We are keeping things simple. What would be nice is simply a win."

LeMond signs contract for $5.5 million

PARIS(AP)—Greg LeMond, winner fo the Tour de France and world championship twice each, Wednesday signed the richest contract ever for a cyclist — $5.5 million guaranteed over three years.

He said his new French team "Z" should give him the strong support he wants to win the Tour de France a third time.

"I had the possibility of 7-Eleven, Toshiba and Z," LeMond said. "I believed that Z was the best for me because it has the riders I need — climbers. I think most important for me is to have a strong team in the Tour de France."

LeMond won the world's most prestigious cycling race this year with a thrilling come-from-behind triumph by eight seconds over Frenchman Laurent Fignon on the final day of the 23-day Tour de France.

His accomplishment was all the more impressive, because he got little help from his ADR teammates, especially in the crucial mountain stages. Next year, LeMond is looking for more support.

Among LeMond's new teammates are Robert Millar of Britain and Ronan Pensec and Eric Boyer of France, all strong climbers. "They were well-placed in the Tour de France," LeMond said. "I remember Millar and Pensec were very strong."

LeMond's contract was announced at a news conference by LeMond and Roger Zannier, president of Zannier SA, a children's clothing distributor whose first initial is used for the cycling entry. Zannier said one or more partners would join in backing the team.

Tennis at URI

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team, under the direction of coach Edwin Gentzler, will open their season this Saturday at the University of Rhode Island.

"We've beaten Rhode Island the last two times we met. It should be very close, but I think we'll win," Gentzler said. We are much stronger than last year. We have more depth and a lot of experience. I have high expectations for the season.

"The Minutewomen will be led by junior, captain Maura Foley.

"Maura is returning as our number-one singles player," Gentzler said. "But there are several players pushing for the top spot."

Gentzler is referring to two of the team's new players. Amy Ryan and Elysa Rosenberg, both freshmen, have proven they can play very well.

"They've had a great week in practice," Gentzler said. "I expect them to start and to help us out a lot."

Coach Gentzler feels he has a strong doubles lineup as well. Kere Eddy and Gail Giracella comprise the first team, while Shizuko Yamasaki and Vanessa Kirchner are the second team.

"This is the first match of the season, and Rhode Island is a tough team," Gentzler said. "It's still too early to tell, but I think we'll do well."

Eason not the home boy at Sullivan Stadium

FOXBORO(AP)—Tony Eason has as much trouble winning fans at Sullivan Stadium, his home field, as Dan Marino does winning games there.

It figures to be a struggle for both quarterbacks again Sunday when the New England Patriots, who won their NFL season opener in the final two minutes, begin their home schedule against the Miami Dolphins, who lost their opener on the final play.

It was Oct. 21, 1984 when Marino and Miami beat New England in Foxboro. They've lost four games there since then.

"It's a tough place to play," Marino said, because of "the crowd noise, and also, they play very well at home."

"Their fans are very supportive."

Eason might not agree.

As the Patriots' quarterback trotted out of the locker room and into the fans' view before their final preseason game, he was booed loudly. Then Green Bay beat New England 16-0.

Not even Eason's outstanding debut in last Sunday's 27-24 win over the New York Jets — 15 of 23 completions for 273 yards and two touchdowns — figures to silence his critics.

"He's been much maligned here of late, people booing him, and I was glad to see him in there, get his confidence going and make some big plays," said wide receiver Cedric Jones, who shares the AFC lead with eight catches after one game.

But with Doug Flutie, a star at Boston College, and Steve Grogan, a respected old pro, as the backup quarterbacks, Eason "will probably get booed" Sunday, Jones said. "But I think if he's playing well, they're going to pull some hamstrings jumping on the bandwagon."

Eason, limited by injuries to just six games the past two seasons, says the booing doesn't bother him.

"You can't be concerned with it," he said. "If I don't play well, it will happen again. If I do, it will lessen a bit."

With Jones, a backup for most of his previous seven years with the Patriots, starting wide receivers Stanley Morgan and Irving Fryar and first-round draft choice Hart Lee Dykes, Eason has plenty of receiving weapons to challenge a defense that was better than just two other teams last year.

"He threw the ball with great timing. He was very accurate," Miami coach Don Shula said of Eason's performance against New York.

"If he keeps it up Sunday, New England could get off to a 2-0 start for just the second time in 15 seasons.

Marino completed 25 of 38 passes for 255 yards and one touchdown last Sunday against Buffalo. Miami was ahead 24-20 when Marino's pass was intercepted by Nate Odomes, giving the Bills the ball with 1:44 left. They scored on Jim Kelly's 2-yard run on the last play and won 27-24.

"We just gave it to them at the end," Marino said.

He should have Mark Clayton, the NFL's third leading pass receiver last year, back in the lineup Sunday. Clayton reported to the team last week after holding out to get his contract renegotiated.

Running back Sammie Smith, the Dolphins' first-round draft pick who also reported last week, seemed less likely to play. Starting linebacker Mark Brown remains unsigned.

Without Brown and linebacker John Offerdahl, who is signed but out of camp, the Dolphins will have more trouble controlling New England. Defensive end John Bosa and Eric Kumerow are listed as questionable with knee problems.

The Dolphins haven't allowed a quarterback sack in 13 games and the Patriots will be without two of their top pass rushers — end Garin Veris and linebacker Andre Tippett — and cornerback Ronnie Lippett. All suffered season ending injuries against Green Bay.

"They are much more accustomed to the turf then we are," Bossio said.

The Minutewomen have won their only game on turf this year, a 3-2 decision over at Springfield College when they played Syracuse.

UMass will also have to play another game on the artificial turf when they play James Madison at ODU on Sunday. Hixon is not worried about playing back-to-back games though.

"I think it's more difficult to play back-to-back at the end of the season," Hixon said. "Our conditioning is very good."

It'll have to be to take Old Dominion on Saturday.

UMass dives into Easterns

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts water polo team enters its third season of varsity competition this weekend with the Eastern Varsity Tournament at Harvard. UMass will be competing in the A Division (with lower ranked teams making up the B division) along with top seeded Navy, Brown, Iona, Army, Harvard, Bucknell and Slippery Rock. UMass, ranked 20th in the preseason NCAA top 20, will square off against 14th ranked Iona on Saturday.

"This is obviously a big game for us," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth. "Iona's tough, but I know we can knock them off. They lost their top three scorers from last year."

Yarworth will be counting on junior Jon Miller to be the catalyst this weekend. After transferring from Navy, Miller was the leading scorer and top defender for the Minutemen last season.

Miller was also named to the All-New England team last year.

"He's a little bug out there," Yarworth said. "He's always in the way. He's got a big heart."

The strength of the team is its depth as well as having two strong goalies. Yarworth plans to rotate nine or ten guys into the six positions. His hole men will be Alex Yelensky and G.T. Ladd.

"These are both big strong players," Yarworth said. "I'm hoping they can come through for us because the hole player can dictate your season for you."

Also figuring into Yarworth's plans are Scott Deluca, Matt Buckley, Mike Melanson and Adam Feldman. "I'm looking for strong play from all those guys," Yarworth said.

Todd Larson and Carl Johnson give Yarworth the luxury of having two top keepers. "With these two, goalie should be a strong point for us," Yarworth said. "Larson is the more steady of the pair but Johnson has a flair for the spectacular He's flashy and he makes big plays."

With Johnson missing some pool time due to a sprained thumb, Larson will most likely get the call on Saturday. One thing UMass lacks is that it sometimes doesn't play as a unit in the water. "We need to work on being a team," Yarworth said.

Minutemen open up Atlantic 10 schedule at Temple

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Correspondent

This weekend the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team opens their Atlantic 10 slate. The Minutemen face the Owls of Temple University this Saturday with a 0-2-0 season.

"From now on we're going to play teams on our level." said head coach Jeff Gettler looking to the game this weekend. "When we've played lower-caliber teams, we've lowered our level of play."

The UMass met with away-game regional defeats against Maine (1-0) and New Hampshire (2-1) last week. Gettler feels his team can only improve their season as long as they play their style of play and dominate the game.

"The team has struggled to find themselves," said Gettler.

Speaking of the losses on the road, he said, "We need to get this monkey off our backs."

The Temple Owls are currently 1-1-0, both of their competitions also being regional. Temple opened their season with with an early defeat of Bucknell University in a 2-0 bout then lost to Lafayette College 2-1 a four days later.

Last season the UMass completed with a record of 8-8-2. The game against Temple was one of the two home games UMass lost, (1-0). Gettler's troops have yet to beat Temple in the three years they've competed.

After last year's game, Temple's head coach John Bowels emphatically shook hands with Gettler to congratulate him and his team on a game very well-played. "We played brilliantly," Gettler said, "and it wasn't good enough.

Temple players to keep a defensive check on include senior midfielder Kennedy Torres. "He goes everywhere," said Gettler.

Other key players are forwards, senior Matt Mannino and sophomore Istzak Akkor. "They target-up well," Gettler said. "They're very dangerous.

"They're a physically aggressive team," said Gettler, "very business-like. They keep the game simple."

For the most part, the Minutemen's original starters remain the same. Sophomore Jon Gruber will be starting in the goal. Supporting him will be senior backs Evan Buxner, who will be in sophomore Darren Stone's place, as Stone's knee is still sore, Tom Skiba and Gael Sullivan, as well as sophomore back Dan Lawrence. Midfielders senior Bill Kousmanidis, junior Pete McEvoy and sophomore Brett Anthony will be combining with forwards senior Steve Cesnek, junior Carl Hanks and sophomore Ray Cunha to employ their style of play into their competition against Temple.

"This is a real important game," Gettler said. "We've got to find a way to win on the road. This is the time to do it."

League nose guard Andy Kosko, outside linebacker Tom Hydro and free safety Mark Beidleman lead the defense.

On offense, look for Brunner to throw often. Last week he completed 15 of 26 passes for 379 yards and five touchdowns, enough to put him at the top of the nation's passing efficiency list for Division I-AA. But the player Reid is impressed with is tight end Vance Cassell.

"Their tight end, we feel, is an NFL draft choice," Reid said. Other targets include split end Rob Varano and flanker Horace Hamm, as well as tailback Erick Torrain.

Lehigh knows it has to get back down to business after last week. This will be the second straight UMass opponent which will be coming off an easy game the week before.

"UMass obviosuly concerns us a great deal," said Engineer coach Hank Small. "They are a quality team. I don't know if I'd say they're the best team we play, but quite possibly they are. They are very strong up front and we're going to have our work cut out for us."

Rudy said his defense was able to shut their offense down to an extent in the second half, but when they did, UMass was not sharp enough to capitalize.

Next for UMass will be another away-from-home encounter at Cornell against the Big Red on Saturday and then it's none other than Wisconsin Sunday. If one recalls correctly, it was the Badgers who defeated the Reds last year in the postseason, thus denying UMass the chance to play in the Final Four for the sixth time. Revenge should be the mode of thinking for that all-important matchup.

Short kicks: In the season's first ISAA Division I poll, Massachusetts was ranked tenth, dropping four notches after the initial 1-1 weekend . . . Scattered among the top twenty slots in the poll were such opponents such as Wisconsin (4th) all the way to North Carolina State (2nd) . . . Others include William and Mary (5th), Connecticut (7th), Rutgers (11th), Central Florida (12th), and Hartford (13rd.)

Football hits the road for Lehigh

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Imagine you've been waiting all year for your birthday. You're just about ready to start celebrating when the dog hops up on the table and eats the cake, spoiling the party.

Tomorrow in Bethlehem, Penn., the Lehigh University football team will try to mark a milestone in its program when it takes to the field of Murray H. Goodman Stadium for its 1,000th game ever. And there, on the opposite side of the field, will be the University of Massachusetts, looking to play the role of Fido.

Of course, even if the Engineers were playing their 1,706th game, or some other arbitrary figure, it wouldn't make one bit of difference to the Minutemen. A game's a game, they say, and even though this will be a second consecutive non-conference clash, UMass will be ready to play no matter what the sideshow.

The Minutemen got a chance to see what they could do last week when they fought James Madison to a 28-28 tie in the season opener at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. And while the team was happy with the tie, UMass coach Jim Reid would just as soon not have another one for at least 188 more games.

But whether it will be a win or a loss for the Minutemen tomorrow remains to be seen. In Lehigh, Reid knows his team has itself a challenge.

"Lehigh has a highly-skilled, explosive offense led by their quarterback Todd Brunner, who can really pile up the offensive yards," Reid said.

Pile them up, like the 613 he packed in against Fordham in last week's 42-7 win. But that's a little deceiving given that Fordham was playing its first-ever Division I-AA game after making a jump up from Division III. Still, Reid is playing it with caution.

"Their offensive line is so big that they block out the sun," Reid said. "Defensively, they are aggressive, well-disciplined and active."

Holding down that solar eclipse at the line of scrimmage are tackles Keith Petzold (6-foot-4, 284 pounds) and Mike Hendricks (6-2, 267). All-Colonial League

UMass takes on Bonnies

Travels to ODU

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

When one decides to lock horns with Old Dominion University in field hockey, one must be ready. The Bonnies have traditionally either been at or knocking on the door to the top of the field hockey ranks in the United States for some time now.

At the present moment, ODU commands the top of the mountain as the defending national champions. And all initial indications are that it is going to be mighty hard to knock them off. Old Dominion is 2-0 this season, with both wins being at Foreman Field, the home of the Bonnies, where the University of Massachusetts field hockey team must play them tomorrow at 1 p.m.

"It's a little early," Hixon said about playing ODU. "I'd like to have a few games under our belt."

A few more anyway than the Minutewomen have won. UMass is also 2-0 on the season with wins over Syracuse University and Boston College. But Hixon is just working players into new positions noew and fields what is relatively a young squad.

One area where UMass is sorely lacking in experience is at the goalie position where sophomore Lisa Charron saw her first minutes as a collegiate goaltender last Saturday and freshman Phillipa Scott made her debut on Wednesday in the BC game.

Both picked up wins, with Charron giving up two goals in the season opener against Syracuse University and Scott posting a shutout, though Scott was not tested very often, as BC could muster just six shots.

"Both have done well in each game that we've played," assistant coach Patti Bossio said. "I don't know who we are going to play tomorrow or Saturday."

On Sunday, the Minutewomen will take on James Madison University. Whoever does get the nod from Hixon on Saturday will have a huge job to do.

"ODU is one of the powerhouses in the country and they'll be there all season," Hixon said.

For the Bonnies, sophomore Kathy Fosina tends the net. She has given up one goal in drawing both starts. As far as offense goes, it is another sophomore, Maike Hilbrand that is the major threat. Hilbrand has scored two goals and one assist in this young season.

Women's field hockey team goes after the ball.

The Minutewomen have plenty of knowledge of Hilbrand though. Last year, the Dutch star burn't UMass at Totman Field when she scored the game winning goal in overtime for Old Dominion. It was a classic match-up between two of last year's top teams.

At the time, the Minutewomen were ranked No. 4 in the nation. ODU was ranked No. 1. UMass was given a grand chance to win the game on two occasions in regulation when UMass was awarded penalty strokes. But Fosina stopped one of Kathy DeAngelis' shots on the way to the net and DeAngelis missed everything on the next one.

DeAngelis is back this year for another shot and is in the same old form. The senior midfielder, who has led the team in scoring for the past two years, is right back on top with three goals so far.

ODU cannot afford to make any mistakes with DeAngelis but UMass at the same time must avoid any unnecessary fouls.

"We can't give up penalty corners," Hixon said.

One element that may be an advantage for the Bonnies is the surface of the field. Foreman is of artificial turf and the Bonnies are very tough to beat at home in the first place. The Minutewomen practiced in Totman Gymnasium in preparation to play on the carpet.

HEADS UP— Women's soccer team takes command of the ball.

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team dropped a tough 1-0 loss on the road to the University of Vermont, dipping their season record to 1-2 and under the .500 mark for the second time this year.

"This one was pretty tough to swallow," said head coach Jim Rudy. "We came out flat and we didn't play well. It was one of those days."

Part of the problem was simply getting onto the field, as the team bus was late leaving and arriving, leaving little time for an adequate warmup.

Both teams were scoreless until seven minutes into the second half, when Vermont got a throw-in from the sideline. That's when Christine Goodman performed her circus-like act, the "flip-flop," a somersault flip and throw.

Her toss was long and accurate enough to get to Cheryl Reid, who headed the ball past UMass keeper Mary Curtis for the game's only score.

Rudy said that his defense wasn't allowed to properly adjust to the play by the referee. Rudy said the problem was "we couldn't block the ball at the source."

The Reds reverted to a pressure cooker-like offense, pulling the sweeper and adding an extra forward to the attack with 15 minutes left. "We gave it to them at the end but it was too late," said Rudy. "We played the last 10 minutes like it was World War III." But even that would not work against a team that seemed to have had all the breaks on their home field.

"We hit the post, then blocked one over the crossbar on an open net," said Rudy. "The referee gave us no breaks today. [April] Kater got taken down in the box and there was no call. Several of the girls complained about missed handballs."

One of the continual problems continued to be finishing off plays. In the first half, Lisa Mickelson had beaten her defender and just had to beat the keeper Joey Fritz (13 saves), but she could not convert. Freshman Kim Eynard, whose bench contributions are being felt, still continues to make some rookie mistakes though, according to Rudy. "She still shoots when she's suppose to pass and pass when she's suppose to shoot."

Rudy also went to Leanne Swartz and Tracy Arwood off the bench toward the end of the first half to replace some tired starters.

"Give them credit," said Rudy. "They gambled with their [offensive] style coming out of the back."

Rudy's defensive plan was to pressure the keeper and the Vermont defenders with a triangle of forwards, eventually forcing the ball to be played by the left fullback, who would be left unmarked. Then Vermont's offensive options would be cut down and more predictable.

Minutemen finish third at tri-meet behind, BC, Yale

By JON REIDEL
Collegian Staff

If betting on yesterday's tri-meet at Franklin Park in Boston between the University of Massachusetts men's cross country team, Boston College, and Yale University was allowed anyone with any money down would have left a definite loser.

Yale, the pre-race underdog, easily grabbed the top spot wiith an impressive score of 23, followed by B.C., the apparent favorite, who came in with a 41 leaving UMass a distant third with 74 points.

"Yale really surprised me,"said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "I knew they were tough and had alot of good milers, but they really ran alot better than I expected. Yale was at their highest possible level."

Early on in the race it looked as though the Minutemen had a good shot at taking the team title with junior Art Smith and Vermont freshman Mike Davis running with the leaders at mile two.

By mile three, however, both Smith and Davis ran into an unexpected date with Mr. rigormortis and faded out of contention.

"Smith and Davis weren't quite ready to run with top three," said O'Brien."They went out hard and payed a big price by mile three, but I was impressed at their early season aggressiveness."

With Smith and Davis falling back out of the top five it was senior Herb Hefner who picked up the slack coming in first for the Minutemen and ninth overall in 27:01 over the five mile course.

Senior Joe Livorsi ran a strong second for ther Minutemen some 39 seconds behind Hefner to put him in 14th place overall.

The most pleasant surprise of the day came from 6-3 red-headed sophomore Pat Ryan. While coming in only three seconds behind Livorsi in 15th place, Ryan has made big strides since his freshman days.

"Ryan definitely ran the best race of the day," said O'Brien. "He showed good signs as a freshman. He's always had alot of mental toughness, he's strong, and had a great summer of training."

Rounding out the top five for UMass were Jim Chute in 18th place and promising freshman Matt Simon in 23rd.

Even with these solid UMass performances it wasn't nearly enough to offset the dominance of Yale which, led by sensation Keith Gibson in 25:23, took places one, four, five, six, seven, and eight.

Boston College, picked by many to be among the top three in New England, had to be surprised by the strong Yale performance. Although the Eagles managed to put its top two runners in second and third place it was not nearly reminiscent of last year's fifth place finish at New England's.

Although it was only the first meet of the year O'Brien was addmitingly disappointed.

"We didn't look as good as I had hoped for," said O'Brien. "It will take us awhile to see what we can really do. Right now I'm a little discouraged, but we stll have a long enough time left in the season to improve. It should be a real rollercoaster season."

Rally commemorates Palestinian massacre

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

About 80 people gathered on the steps of the Student Union Building Friday for a rally commemorating the seventh anniversary of the Sept. 17 massacre of hundreds of Palestinians in Lebanon.

Several speakers focused on the ongoing struggle between the Israeli government and the Palestinian people over the question of an autonomous Palestinian state.

A handful of counter-protesters, representing the Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI), silently demonstrated the Palestinian rally by displaying placards which stated: "There are two sides to every issue." SAFI is a Zionist organization which believes in the existence of Israel.

"There's only one side to this issue," said one speaker, Indian graduate student Pratip Dastidar, in response to the signs. "Dead bodies and smoking guns."

Dastidar said the rally was held to remind people that Palestinian people are still being killed in Israel, the West Bank and the Gaza strip.

UMass undergraduate Eyad Kishawi, who grew up in West Beirut, said he witnessed the Sept. 17 massacre of Palestinians by what he called a "coordinated effort between the Israeli army and the Lebanese Christian Militia," or Phalangists.

Kishawi recalled working with other civilians to recover hundreds of bodies scattered throughout the area or buried in mass graves.

Kishawi said Americans should know that the U.S. government uses their tax money to aid foreign countries, including Israel.

"How can any sane human being support the total annihilation of my race?" he asked.

Kishawi said if Israelis accept Palestinians with full human, civil and political rights, they will coexist peacefully as an integrated society.

Charles Lenchner, a veteran of the Israeli Defense Force (IDF) who was jailed for refusing to serve in the West Bank, said, contrary to many Israeli's beliefs, Palestinians are not a threat to Israel.

Lenchner said Israeli right wing conservatives are using the IDF for political purposes to withhold rights from Palestinians.

Humanitarian to speak

Holocaust survivor advocates UMass

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Nobel Laureate Elie Wiesel, who survived internment in a Nazi concentration camp during World War II, is scheduled to speak about issues of human rights at 7:30 p.m. today in the Fine Arts Center concert hall.

Wiesel, who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1986, won national acclaim for his best-selling novel Night, a memoir which details his family's confinement in the concentration camps in Buchenwald, Germany.

Currently a professor of religious studies and philosophy at Boston University, Wiesel is a recipient of the Human Rights Law Award, the Humanitarian Award of the International League of Human Rights, the Voice of Conscience Award and the Martin Luther King Medallion, among others.

He has also served as Chairman of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council and on the President's Commission on the Holocaust. He was founder of the National Jewish Center for Learning and Leadership.

Randi Dubno, president of Hillel, which is hosting the event, said Wiesel is renowned for his uplifting and empowering speeches on human rights issues.

"He is a very inspirational individual whose message has a lot to deal with human issues and human dignity," she said. "I'm hoping he'll be able to impart understanding to students on campus so ... all the groups on campus will pull together for the fight for human rights and dignity."

Dubno said Wiesel is scheduled to dine with Chancellor Joseph Duffey before his speech.

Town fair raises money for Family Center

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

The normally empty Amherst Town Common was transformed into a bustling array of games and crafts during the second-annual Apple Harvest and Craft Festival held Saturday to benefit the Amherst Family Center.

Despite the inclement weather, hundreds of children, students and adults flocked to the event, which offered features ranging from pony rides to performances by local bands.

Mary Applegate, director of community relations for the family center, said proceeds from the fair, raised through ticket sales and vendor fees, reached nearly $9,000 to aid the center, some $300 more than last year. The center operates out of the parish hall in the North Congregational Church.

"I think it was a big success," Applegate said of the fair. "It was something fun for families to do together."

The center benefits Amherst families, including those of graduate and older undergraduate students, by offering parenting workshops and support groups and providing study space, she

Internships provide students credits, experience

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Lisa Gingras did not have the typical summer job, flipping burgers or lifeguarding on a beach.

Instead, she did an internship at TJ Maxx, a major clothing retail chain. She said the experience was the "the most valuable learning experience I've ever had."

Gingras is one of more than 6,000 students who have taken advantage of the 17-year-old University Internship Program.

The program accomodates all majors at the University. All students in the Internship Program can receive up to 15 credits. 35 percent of the students are paid.

Ellen Wolf, director of the Internship Program, said has shaped the program to fit students' specific needs.

"We have no attrition rate," Wolf said. "Students are very sure that this is what they want because we have a screening process in which we very carefully make sure that the needs of the student are met."

Wolf said students gain experience and confidence outside the classroom.

Gingras agreed, "It was a hands-on thing where they pushed me right into the company."

"It was stressful at times because they gave me a lot of responsibility and I wasn't sure I could handle it," Gingras said. "But it assured me that I was in the right field."

Although more than 6,000 students have done internships, Wolf said there are more opportunities than students.

"Agencies are clamoring for applicants," she said.

She said companies seek interns from UMass because of the program's success.

"The students have built the reputation of this program," Wolf said. "I just think that not enough students are aware of the opportunities."

Internships may range from working in laboratories and research centers to large corporations.

Students can also create their own internship. A food, science and nutrition major is presently in Siberia, training an professional athlete for the 1992 Olympics, Wolf said.

"We are flexible. If a student has an idea, usually something can be worked out," Wolf said.

Michelle Bilodeau, who did an internship this summer at The Boston Five bank, said her experience has focused her future plans.

"I think the program is very beneficial, Bilodeau said. "If you hate it, it is one less area to look into after you graduate."

She added,"But, if you like it, you know that is what you want to do. People who don't have the experience [of interning] don't know what they are really getting into."

Donna McGee, journalism intern said,"If you are thinking about the future, it's definitely a good way to focus your goals."

Journalism gets new computers

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Fees. There's a long list of them on students' tuition bills. An activities fee, an undergraduate support fee, a curriculum fee and others. Students pay them, but often don't know where their money goes.

However, this semester, these fees have materialized for some 90 journalism students who are currently using 16 new MacIntosh Computers for classes in Bartlett 109. Carpeting, a freshly-painted classroom, and a white dry-erase board complement this updated atmosphere.

Nine additional computers were also installed in the journalism office for professors and staff.

The $115 curriculm fee charged to undergraduates beginning last year financed the Macs and renovations, Provost Richard O'Brien said in an earlier interview.

O'Brien said he established the fee to improve the education offered at the University of Massachusetts by enhancing teaching equipment and projects.

The money cannot be used to finance projects other than improving capital equipment, he said.

"Because of the curriculum fee, we were able to add a modest amount of teaching equipment, but not nearly enough," O'Brien said. "It was a residue of better days. We are still seeing a few things left over from those days."

The cost of the computers was $92,000, which constitutes nearly one-third of the $300,000 used this year to update equipment, he said.

Norman Sims, chairman of the journalism department, said after three proposals and 10 years, money was finally allocated for the investment.

"There was never money available from the state, until the student fee was put into effect," Sims said. "The money was really used to improve education."

Before the MacIntosh computers, students enrolled in journalism classes used antiquated Olympia manual typewriters when learning to write news stories.

Renee Smith, a senior journalism major, said the computers are a plus for students, but she would have preferred the addition of class sections to the computers.

"When students get jobs after college, knowing how to use a computer will save a lot of time," Smith said. "They definitely put students at an advantage. But I would rather have classes."

She said she received only one of the four journalism classes she pre-registered for this semester.

Sims said the computers will dramatically change the quality of education within one year by teaching the students to be real reporters.

Speaker warns Americans about environmental damage

By SCOTT ROE
Collegian Staff

Society's ignorance about the environment and the lack of an environmentally aware constituency have led to the decline of our harbors and coastlines, but, times are changing, according to the director of the Urban Harbors Institute at UMass/Boston.

Director Richard Delaney spoke to a crowd of about 60 people on "Coastal and Harbor Pollution" at Hampshire College Thursday night.

The event was the third in a series of lectures on Restoring the Earth: Strategies for a Just and Sustainable Future, a three-week colloquy sponsored by the college.

"I think the real definition of national security (and) international security is how healthy is our planet and what is each nation doing to contribute or to degrade from that present state of health," he said.

Delaney said approximately 40 percent of the United States wetlands and salt marshes have been destroyed through land development and the improper dumping of pollutants. He said this destruction is ongoing in other countries throughout the world as well.

This situation is being alleviated by an increasing awareness in environmental issues in the United States, Delaney said.

"The real solution comes right down to individuals," he said. "We have been a part of the problem and we're certainly part of the solution."

The collective buying power of the population can be used to help the environment if people realize that some of the products they purchase have negative effects on the environment, he said.

Some hazardous products include plastics, ranging from six-pack holders to plastic fishing nets, he said. Annually, 50,000 to 100,000 marine mammals are trapped and often killed by plastic pollution, he said.

While more and more people are realizing the environment is is danger, it will take more awareness to help rescue our natural resources, Delaney said.

He encouraged employers to develop a more environment-conscious business ethic and urged the stronger enforcement of existing environmental protection laws.

said.

The fair provides one-third of the center's annual operating budget, Applegate said.

Pam Simpson, director of staff and volunteers said, the fair is a way for the center to thank the town for its acceptance of the Family Center.

"The town seems happy to have us," Simpson said. "We wanted to give something back."

Simpson said the fair had higher participation from residents and vendors this year than last year.

"We're really successful today," Simpson said. "The vendors are doing well and there is more participation in children's activities than last year."

However, not all vendors said they were doing well. Barbara Weidenfeld of Shutesbury, selling silver jewelry with her husband Jerome, said, "Other craftspeople said sales were better last year. People seem to be just looking around."

Weidenfeld said the fact that last year's fair was held around Parents' Weekend may have accounted for the higher sales.

Among volunteers at the fair were members of Delta Chi fraternity at the University of Massachusetts. Simpson said members of the group helped to set up tables before the fair and to clean up afterward.

"The Delta Chi's were very helpful," Simpson said. "They made the operation successful."

Chris Flynn, house manager at Delta Chi, said the fraternity wants to serve the community and improve its image to the town.

"We have to prove ourselves to Amherst," Flynn said. "A lot of us want to go into the community and help out."

Marie Hartwell-Walker, a member of the center's board of directors, said the event was a success for area families, and especially for parents of small children.

"The Apple Festival is successful because everyone's having a good time," Hartwell-Walker said.

New 'Help' phones delayed

Students have to wait until next year for the installation of six more emergency "help" phones on campus, Associate Director of Public Safety Larry Holmes said last week.

The University of Massachusetts Emergency Reporting System provides the campus community with a network of 11 direct phone lines to the UMass police. The phones, housed in yellow boxes topped with blue lights, are scattered across campus.

Holmes said the new phones, which are scheduled to be installed by July 20, 1990, represent one step in a master plan to add 93 "help" phones to campus.

The phones will be installed at trouble spots on campus where there is high pedestrian traffic, including various bus stops, the Observatory, and the Southwest athletic fields, he said.

In addition to emergency usage, people who need to make non-emergency telephone calls to people on campus may also use the phones, Holmes said.

HOMEWARD BOUND — Oil spill cleanup personnel from Task Force One arrive at the small boat harbor in Valdez after weeks of cleaning beaches as part of Exxon's shutdown of the oil spill cleanup operations for the summer.

Exxon pronounces Alaskan shore stable

State official says cleanup not complete

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Cleanup workers and state officials say there's still plenty of oil fouling the shores of Prince William Sound, but Exxon insists the beaches are nearly free of oil as a summer-long effort ends.

Exxon officials pronounced the 1,100 miles of oil-tainted shoreline "environmentally stable" Thursday and proclaimed their 25-week cleanup of the nation's worst oil spill a job well done.

Exxon Corp. Chairman Lawrence Rawl said in Juneau that the affected shores of the sound and Gulf of Alaska farther south "are certainly what most people would call clean."

But Dennis Kelso, the state's environmental commissioner, was not pleased with what he saw when he toured shorelines on two islands south of Valdez on Thursday.

"This beach is not environmentally stable," he said as he poked a stick into thickly oiled rocks on Knight Island. "If we had wildlife here, they'd be pretty heavily oiled."

Exxon officials said they expect to declare the summer cleanup complete today, 25 weeks after the tanker Exxon Valdez cracked open on a reef and spilled nearly 11 million gallons of crude oil.

State officials are pressuring Exxon to commit to a greater research effort over the winter to determine the best way to resume the cleanup next spring.

"The point isn't that Exxon has done a terrible job," Kelso said. "There's just more to be done. We don't need to wait until spring to get the preparations going."

Exxon officials said the company will continue to monitor the spill and respond to major problems. About 300 cleanup workers will remain in Alaska, down from about 10,000 at the height of the effort.

Otto Harrison, general manager of Exxon's Valdez operations, said that while oil remained in some areas, it wasn't enough to harm wildlife.

"What you've seen is a coastline almost free of oil," Harrison said. "You're seeing the steady recovery of Prince William Sound."

State officials agreed Exxon's efforts had resulted in some cleaner shorelines, but disputed the company's rosy portrayal of an environmental rebound.

On his tour of the Knight Island shoreline, Kelso noted there were few signs of wildlife on what once was a shore rich with the sounds of life.

Kelso said a chemical fertilizer recently sprayed on the rocks showed sign of breaking down the oil in some areas.

In other spots, however, it appeared the cleanup was rushed to meet Exxon's self-imposed deadline, Kelso said.

On Green Island, Kelso used a pocket knife to scrape sun-baked oil off blackened rocks.

"It looks and feels like tar - the way an asphalt driveway feels," he said.

Cleanup workers returned to Valdez by the hundreds Thursday on their way home. Many echoed the sentiments of Roger Consiel, who was on the first crew of 48 workers dispatched to the oiled beaches after the March 24 grounding of the oil tanker.

"I think Exxon should come back next year. There's a lot left to be done."

Consiel, 39, was an unemployed cannery worker when an Exxon contracter hired him for cleanup duty. He returns home to his family with about $30,000 in spill wages in his savings account.

"Not bad for 5½ months' work," he said with a smile. "I'm pretty happy about it. It would be nice to come back next year, too."

Jenifer proposes plan to help out city students

BOSTON (AP) — A top Massachusetts education official has proposed a system of live-in prep schools that would help inner-city students escape their troubled environment, according to a report published yesterday.

The proposal by higher education Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer has drawn the interest of an education group at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The live-in academies would mimic prestigious private schools attended by the wealthy. They would help students in Boston and other Massachusetts cities break away from neighborhoods beset by violence and drugs.

"If we truly want to save these so-called children at risk, we have to do something rather dramatic about the environment they're in," Jenifer told The Boston Herald.

"Give them positive educational opportunity, a library, a gymnasium, solid food, people who believe in them," Jenifer said. "The idea isn't foreign to us. It's been done for rich kids for years. If it's good enough for rich kids, why not create the same kinds of schools for the poor?"

The public schools would be located in minority neighborhoods and would offer students rigorous and regimented programs.

Admission would be voluntary but students would not be free to come and go as they please. Students would be required to wear uniforms and would be assigned tasks at the school, under the plan envisioned by Jenifer. They would earn spending money as well as cash to put away for college.

Jenifer has pressed for the creation of such schools around the country before the Quality Education for Minorities project, a group funded by the Carnegie Corp. and based at MIT.

Richard Hope, the group's executive director, said it is seriously considering creating the schools on a pilot basis and will make a decision in January.

"Urban education is in desperate shape," Jenifer said. "If we don't take the challenge to do something, we're going to have a very serious long-term problem."

Jenifer said the residential schools would serve 400 to 500 students and would cost no more than existing programs. But Jenifer said he may face public opposition to the idea.

State workers get raises through reclassification during review

BOSTON (AP) — While the state is having a hard time keeping its budget in balance, hundreds of state employees are receiving pay raises by having their jobs reclassified.

The Department of Personnel Administration revises the job titles and salaries of about 500 workers every three months, based on questionnaires the various state agencies submit. The objective is to match pay, job titles and actual duties performed by the state's 70,000 employees.

Managers have not received pay increases for three years and this has led some observvcers to suggest that the system of reclassifying people is being used to give raises.

Protests continue in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - About 10,000 protesters, jogging, chanting and waving banners, marched today through the heat of Johannesburg to a police headquarters where countless activists have been detained and interrogated.

Another anti-government protest, involving nearly 2,000 people, took place at the central square in Pretoria, the capital. Some demonstrators climbed onto a statue of Paul Kruger, one of the political patriarchs of the Afrikaners who now control the government.

Both protests were among the largest ever staged in the two cities, and dramatized the impact of President-elect F.W. de Klerk's declaration last week that his white-led government would not block peaceful protests.

On Wednesday, a day after de Klerk's statement, more than 20,000 people joined a protest march in Cape Town against police brutality, the largest such demonstration ever authorized by the government.

In Johannesburg, the marchers included black youths, dark-suited white professionals, nuns and prominent activists, among them Winnie Mandela, wife of jailed black nationalist Nelson Mandels. Many youths carried posters demanding his release.

Traffic officers cordoned off side streets leading into the parade route in Johannesburg but did not interfere as scores of black and white church leaders headed the procession down thoroughfares that normally would have been clogged with lunch-hour traffic.

Organizers said the march was intended to protest police violence and to demand an end to discriminatory and restrictive laws so negotiations could begin on dismantling apartheid.

Government, rebels agree on peace talks

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Salvadoran government and leftist rebels have reached an agreement on conditions for peace talks to end the nation's nearly 10-year-old civil war, an observer to the talks said.

The Roman Catholic auxiliary bishop of El Salvador, Gregorio Rosa Chavez, described the mood at the discussions as "stupendous."

Speaking at a news conference Thursday night, he said the two sides planned to release a 10-point document today outlining their plans for peace talks, and that the main issues will include a cease-fire and bringing the rebels into Salvadoran political life.

We are all pink on the inside

It is interesting to hear the term "minority" used so loosely by politicians when they make reference to their individual policies.

Many stand behind the magical word with a ridiculous vision, chuck full of rhetoric and promise. They stumble down the same repetitive path as their predecessors, each one more suave than the next.

Keith B. Strier

But wait! Perhaps there is a glimmer of hope. Mayor Edward Koch, who ruled the New York Throne since I was six (that's 12 years ago), was tossed from his mighty seat.

Along with his departure arrives a golden opportunity. For the first time in the history of New York, a mayor will not address "minorities" from the periphery of their socio-economic situation, but from within the living, breathing walls of their inner-city heartland.

An Afro-American mayor for the city of New York City should have been a reality years ago, not a prospective outcome in 1989.

I am, of course, referring to the honorable David Dinkins, former Manhattan Borough President.

I have long yearned for the opportunity to erase discrimination from the chalkboards of elementary schools and cork boards of college walls.

I was slightly affected by speeches given at the freshman convocation here at UMass. The alternating themes of prejudice and racial tension pervaded the auditorium throughout the first twenty minutes of our "welcome" to the University.

It is unfortunate that the executive faculty of our fine university felt compelled to remind the new students that this is an internationally diverse campus an any type of discriminatory behavior will not be tolerated.

I grew up in a suburb of New York. It was not exactly the city, but we had our problems.

Police guards patrolled the junior and upper high schools, keeping the racial clashes to a minimum. I remember a huge brawl that started between a White girl and a Black girl. It eventually evolved into a recess activity.

That happened in second grade!

Recently I returned to my home town, now New Jersey, and nothing has changed.

What can be done to initiate a change?

There exists no need for another leader of truth, nor a powerful, influential speaker to rival hatred.

Rather, what is needed is an admittance of injustice and an expressed desire to want to change — a desire to set asunder true humanity from the ingrained prejudices of our nation.

Technology has flipped society upside down; there have been more advances than we can deal with in one life time. A moral and ethical movement must be established in the minds of the young — us! We are the answer.

Many of our parents and grandparents developed their ideals in a time when the Great Depression was still dinner talk, and Martin Luther King Jr. was considered a hindrance to progress. That is not to say that sixty years ago prejudice was not an acceptable and efficient system.

American society was young and stupid. But we have grown up now, and it is time to start tying our own shoe laces.

David Dinkins is just one link on this colorful and diverse chain. The students of every University in the world must create the bonds that hold it in place.

Work hard to extend its touch across the nation and into the minds of your friends. The college experience should include more than books and bottles.

If you can't save the whales, nor spare the environment, at least help others realize that it's not too important what color you are on the outside.

We are all pink on the inside.

High time for Bush to set his priorities straight

When will President Bush wake up to reality? He continues to purchase another unneeded nuclear weapon system of mass destruction, the B-2 Stealth bomber, at a final cost of more than $500 million per plane.

Meanwhile, across the nation and the world, people are dying in a ravaging AIDS epidemic.

Surely by cancelling the B-2, SDI and other nuclear weapon systems, enough money would be freed to find cures for AIDS, most cancer and probably feed and shelter the homeless. And all of the "leftovers" would more than likely help us solve our problems with balancing the US budget.

The Federal Drug Administration must wake up to reality as well.

While people die of AIDS here in America, other AIDS sufferers elsewhere are being saved with AIDS drugs obtained through illegal markets, because the FDA stubbornly delays testing approval it — not to mention making it illegal to manufacture, prescribe and possess.

The FDA must wake up and cease its anti-human AIDS policy immediately.

The Supreme Court must realize that the true marriage bond is the strong love and mutual sharing relationship bond — not a simple piece of paper.

It must recognize this and the need to grant nothing less than full human, civil and economic rights and privileges — regardless of sexual preference in such relationships.

I urge everyone to wake up: the president, Supreme Court, FDA and Congress by sending them copies of this letter.

Take your wheels home

Thursday, as I walked past the Fine Arts Center, I noticed "Skate's Okay" scrawled in chalk along the cement stairs heading to the Rand Theatre.

For me, this is the final straw. This is the third semester that I have had to deal with skateboard harassment.

I had forgotten about this local teenage trend while I was away this summer. In the back of my mind, I had secretly hoped that this trend had become passe. So much for that hope.

The Skateboard Crew, or Punks on Plastic, as I like to call them, are back and stronger than ever. Last year, I ended up walking in the midst of what must have been some sort of convention. They were headed for the Parking Garage, a haven for these fiberglass freaks. On the way, I ended up with squashed toes, without so much as an apology.

The other ultimate paradise for the sidewalk surfers is the Fine Arts Center, where this conspicuous graffiti was spotted. I guess they must feel that they do not belong there, primarily because of the small signs that announce in an astoundingly authoritative voice that "skateboarding is prohibited." These miniscule signs are not proving to be a sufficient deterrent.

I know that I am not alone in my disgust over these wheeled demons haunting our campus. Last week, my next door neighbor sustained minor injuries while a horde of juvenile ramp-jumpers accosted him, leaving him for dead.

Gayle Long

Myself, well, I was assaulted with an entire board, because the professional surfer fell off. The laws of motion took over, and before I knew it, was struck soundly by a fluorescent yellow and green slab. The bruises I received are not noble enough to write of, but the incident has left me scarred for life.

The skateboarders could probably be tolerated if they cared about our campus. But they leave black tread marks all over the majestic FAC, once a place of abstract beauty and pride here at UMass.

If anyone deserves to turn this place into a shambles, it is not the locals that want to terrorize college students, take over the walking paths, and bar entrance to lectures and events.

The people who walk on campus deserve to have a nice, peaceful stroll. They do not need to buy SONAR so that they are alerted when the rolling refuse are preparing another strike, or are migrating from one location to another.

If everyone was supposed to surf to class, then we would probably have a double yellow line on the footpaths, to avoid the accidents that would be sure to occur.

Finally, I am making a plea to those pillars of society, the skateboarders themselves. You do not pay to go here, and I do. You do not have to take classes here, and I do. You do not care about the appearance of this campus, but I do.

Therefore, do me a favor, and build a ramp in your backyard as the weather gets colder and you do not feel like bundling up to come out and abuse my home.

That way, you do not worry about a campus vigilante hiding among the cars at the garage or the cement columns at the FAC.

Chimps in cool luxury

Here's one for animal lovers of all ages . . .

Your name is Paul. You're fifteen years old. You've been involved in some medical research, but now you're about to retire to an air-conditioned bungalow worth $63,000 for the rest of your life. You've also got a backyard to play in that carries a price tag of about $300,000.

Bob Bobala

Sound good? Sure it does, except you're a chimpanzee and you've been infected by the AIDS virus.

Paul is one of several chimps out in San Antonio that are on the verge of being somewhat repaid for their service to humanity. A retirement complex for chimpanzees that have been used in AIDS and hepatitis research is in the making.

Now let me run this by you again. These chimps aren't just getting a lifetime supply of bananas and clean cages. They're getting $63,000 air-conditioned bungalows, plus a playground worth about $300,000. Condos and Club Med for chimps. Just give me a monkey suit and I'm there.

Besides that, these chimp retirees are also getting a $2.9 million "pension" fund which is being established at a San Antonio bank. The money for this comes from the chimps' 'earnings" — that is, the funds and fees that have been paid by private and government institutions to use the animals for research. Maybe a trip to Vegas can be arranged so Paul can blow some of his dough.

However, there is one drawback for these chimps: the retirees will have to do without the 19-inch color televisions that the chimps enjoy when they're involved in research. The retired chimps don't need them though, says one of the directors of the project. The retirees can visit with each other, so they'll never be bored enough to watch TV.

I hope not, but you have to wonder how exciting it is to hang around with diseased chimps. I think I'd just stay in my air-conditioned bungalow and be solitary.

I know, I know. I shouldn't be bent out of shape because these chimps are getting $63,000 bungalows and I'm living, by my own choice, here on campus. If I were injected with the AIDS virus I'd deserve a heck of a lot more than a $63,000 bungalow, even if it were air-conditioned. Society is deeply indebted to these highly intelligent animals who have been used and abused for the sake of humanity. The reason I'm so adverse to the idea of this retirement plan is that I've never met a chimpanzee.

True, I never have. But still . . . Okay, maybe Paul deserves it because he's a celebrity. He was the first chimp in the world to be infected with the AIDS virus for medical research. He should spend the next 35 years (chimps can live to age 50) in air-conditioning. No, wait a minute. I'll make a deal. How about if Paul moves into my dorm room? He'll like it — I have a single this year. I'll move into the the $63,000 air-conditioned bungalow.

They deserve a comfortable retirement. But if these chimps are well enough to enjoy life in these condos, they're well enough to enjoy it some place a little less expensive. If they're sickly from the medical experiments they've been subjected to, the bungalows aren't going to make much of a difference.

What I really want to know is this: Where are the $63,000 air-conditioned bungalows for the humans who are infected with AIDS?

"At newspapers, the editors don't edit stories with lead pencils and use manual typewriters," Sims said. "Most newspapers don't use paper."

He said the department selected MacIntosh computers because they are easy for first-time users to understand and are widely used by newspapers.

"Good things will happen when [Palestinians] get their rights," said Lenchner. "[Israelis] won't have to fight anymore."

Speaker Sekhulumi Ntsoaole, a student from South Africa, compared apartheid, the South African government's policy of racial segregation, and the Palestinian situation in Israel. He also equated Zionism with Nazism and racism.

Zionism is a movement that was first established to recreate a Jewish state and is now directed at developing Israel.

Karen Sumner, a member of SAFI, said Zionism is not racism. She added that rally speakers had taken events out of context and therefore did not present a complete picture of the situation.

SAFI member Orna Sonnerschein said, "By equating Zionism with Nazism and racism, [the speakers] implied they're against the existence of Israel."

The rally was organized by the Palestine Solidarity Committee, a group devoted to educating the American public about the Palestinian liberation struggle, said Lenchner.

Other sponsors were Tzedek (Hebrew for justice)—the Jewish Alternative, the Organization for Marxist Studies and the Radical Student Union.

UMass Chorale brings out best in students

By PAUL D'AGOSTINO
Collegian Correspondent

Are you looking for travel, a way to bring the best of your talents out, and a chance to meet new people? No, this is not the US Army, this is the UMass Chorale, a Five-College group open to anyone who has an interest in music and singing. The chorale performs various types of music ranging from classical, Renaissance, modern jazz and pieces written by the faculty.

Throughout the school year, the chorale performs in churches, public schools, and on campus, in addition to a five day tour of Massachusetts in the spring. Every two years, the chorale goes overseas, and the 1990 planned trip is a tour of the Soviet Union, where they plan to perform music by American composers, and classical and Russian folks songs. Some of the cities the groups will be holding concerts in will be Moscow, Tallin and Leningrad.

Two years ago, the chorale toured Japan, and there they performed at Hokkaido University, sister school to UMass. Past countries include Italy, Spain, England and Vienna. Money for the trip comes from the students themselves and any fund raising they do.

Not only do they pay their own way, but they are also helping the Krasnoyarsk Youth Ensemble from Siberia to tour Amherst. The all-women's choir will be performing in Amherst the 27-29 of this month, and they will come to UMass for a free concert in Bezanson Recital Hall at 3:30 p.m. on the 29th.

Richard Du Bois, the chorale's director, takes care of the musical part, while students take care of concert logisitics such as transportation, tuxedos and dresses for the singers. Du Bois has been director since 1965, but the chorale has existed for 40 years.

Many students feel Du Bois brings out the best in students.

"He challenges without being intimidating, and can make your interest in music increase exponentially," explained junior architectural studies major, Martin Fisher.

Sophmore Tom Bozza recalls his first concert experience last semester and Du Bois's conducting, "His conduction conveys so much emotion you feel so much energy and power. He is excellent at interpreting and conveying the emotion of a piece."

UMass Chorale is listed as Music 560, is a one credit course, and is open to anyone in the Five-College area interested in music. "It provides an opportunity for musical and social growth." said Gayle Michaud, publicity coordinator.

Michaud, a senior communications major, is also a member of a smaller part of the chorale called the Chamber Singers, which performs pieces of higher difficulty. She said, "Chorale is an excellent way to learn about music and to meet people, and it is the educational opportunity of a lifetime."

Andrew Tosh
Pearl Street - Ten Below
Friday, Sept. 15

The fathers are gone, but the sons keep the names and the music alive.

REVIEW

Friday night at Pearl Street's Ten Below club, Andrew Tosh proved that Ziggy Marley is not the only son of a reggae star who's making a name for himself.

Son of Peter Tosh, who was in Bob Marley's Wailers before going solo, Andrew (What kind of name is that for a reggae star?) peaked as soon as he walked onstage, and kept the crowd jammin' all night.

Local reggae band, the Equalites, opened the show and got the crowd primed and dancing, with their funky originals which included "Crackdown," about the Tiananmen Square tragedy.

Then Tosh's band took over. The tight sounding band includes three members, Santa Davis on drums, Fully Fillard on bass, and Robbie Lynn on keyboards, all from Peter Tosh's band. They, and the two female back-up singers, are fine musicians. But Andrew Tosh's stage presence outshined them all. He strutted around the stage with the confidence of a man that's been performing for decades.

Tosh beautifully interspserced his own songs with those of his late father. Like his father's songs, and like most great reggae, all the songs had a simple, danceable beat, and simple, idealist lyrics that dealt with issues such as the Rastafarian religion, the legalization of marijuana and equality and justice for all.

One of the earlier songs in the set was "An Original Man," a song Tosh wrote for his father ("Although Peter Tosh has gone/His work has to carry on"). It was a moving song, but also filled with joy and celebration, and no one left the dance floor while he sang it.

But Tosh made it clear that he's more than just a singer making a living on his father's name. His other original songs, including the title cut from his upcoming album, "Make Room For the Youth," and "Come Together," ("Come together 'cause we are one/We gotta fight discrimination") demonstrated that he may soon be a bona-fide reggae star in his own right.

After walking offstage at the conclusion of "Legalize Marijuana" (Rastafarians smoke marijuana as part of a religious ceremony), Tosh returned to play his father's hit, "Legalize It" (also about marijuana), and ended the show with a blistering version of Bob Marley's "Get Up, Stand Up."

The crowd tried to yell for more, but were too exhausted from their two-hour dance fest.

Mom's home cooking, with a better view

By ALISE HARFIELD
Collegian Staff

Maybe it will be the captivating wide-window, aeriel view of the Connecticut river as it scurries through southern Vermont, or the green Mt. Wantisque staring you straight in the face, or even its valley, a winding local railroad track. Something about this Mediterranean-American Restaurant called The Fifth Season will reach your senses, especially your taste buds.

DINING OUT

An extensive menu offers selections from Israel, Greece, Syria and America, like hummus, Matzoball soup (just like Mom's!), Israeli mushroom salad, scallops Diane, stir-fry chicken and moussaka, to name a few, and almost as appetizing as their flavors are their prices—perfect for the college budget.

Appetizers like jumbo shrimp cocktail (with 6 shrimp) or hummus range from $3-$6, main dishes like Spanish, Albanian, Mexican or Cajun Crepes from $6-$9, kebabs of beef, lamb or seafood from $11-$14, delicious and fresh seafood specialties like shrimp etoufee, scallops Diablo, and baked stuffed shrimp or scallops $9-$14. My favorite, Fifth Season Chicken, is a double breast of boneless tender chicken smothered with mushrooms and artichoke hearts in a luscious, light cream sauce.

Even before attempting to finish your large portion, you will be delighted with the early arrival of warm pita and Italian breads, complete with a small crock of whipped butter.

A choice of soup or salad comes with your dinner order. The Italian Minestrone soup was terrific — hot, just spicy enough and full of veggies.

Perhaps the best deal is dessert. You can choose from specialties like chocolate mousse, blintzes or any of the daily specials. But the best choice of all is a crepe. Israeli (strawberries and vanilla ice cream), Arctic (vanilla ice cream and rum) or Brattleboro's very own, which is full of vanilla ice cream, apples, raisins and cinnamon. The scrumptious crepes are served on a huge dinner dish, warm and stuffed with plenty of sweet ice cream and one of the above favorites. Also, the freshly brewed coffee does well to wash down whatever you may decide upon.

To add to the eating experience, the service is impeccable. Yoni Szarvas, owner of the Fifth Season describes his restaurant as "A place for everyone."

He'll gladly tell you of the live jazz every Friday and Saturday night at 10 p.m., and the special guests that visit his establishment once a month.

The Fifth Season is located in downtown Brattleboro, a short, scenic 45-minute drive on 91 north, in the Main Street Gallery.

Long before you're done wiping your mouth with a pink scalloped napkin you'll be glad you experienced The Fifth Season.

Weber finds the true Chet Baker

By W. J. GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff

Let's Get Lost
Pleasant Street Theater

"He was just a neurotic idiot", says one of the more realistic women from Chet Baker's life interviewed for Bruce Weber's latest movie, a documentary of the trumpeter's life, appropriatly entitled Let's Get Lost.

FILM REVIEW

Weber is a fashion photographer, notorious for his Calvin Klein advertisements, but the shallowness that the majority of the man's work revels in actually serves the film's subject well. Chet Baker achieved his musical genius easily, learning the trumpet within two weeks in his childhood and his observations on his life and work are, to put it mildly, lacking. When asked what his favorite high is the singer and trumpeter of some of the most hauntingly beautiful jazz ever performed/recorded responds by describing his favourite drug high, known as a "speedball" for anyone interested.

Just looking at the difference between the man's face in the 40's and 50's and the ravaged death-like mask Baker grew into in this decade tell the story of this man's life. Combined with the cool jazz on the soundtrack, Weber's images of Baker cannot help but deeply affect the audience.

While the arty montage that is Weber's forte does occasionally annoy (as do the occasionally, phenomenally stupid questions made by the interviewers) the soundtrack (of course) overrides such petty grievances. The album of the movie, Chet Baker Sings and Plays From the Film "Let's Get Lost" is availiable on Novus/RCA Records and is a worthy summary of this man's artistry.

Back to the movie: it's shot in black and white, contains interviews with Baker made shortly before his death and ends on a sinister note concerning his fall from an Amsterdam hotel balcony in May of 1987. Ultimately this is a sad film, chronicling the life of a tremendously gifted musician and his drug addled existence. Set to Weber's images and Baker's understated but piercingly present tunes the musician's life receives it's appropriate and worthy ode.

Let's Get Lost will be playing at the Pleasant Street Theater in Northampton for only two more days due to the shamefully small turnout it has so far received. Shows are at 7:05 p.m. and at 9:20 p.m. tonight and tomorrow only.

Starting on Thursday, Pleasant Street will be showing The Making of Do the Right Thing as well as Spike Lee's first movie, Joe's Bedstuy Barbershop in its downstairs theatre. These showings will run through till the 26th of this month. And for those of you who have not yet seen Lee's Do The Right Thing, a movie that came very close to deserving all of its hype, it is playing at the Calvin Theater, also in Northampton.

Deputy Chief Jack Luppold of the Department of Public Safety said the project has been slowed recently because of budget problems.

"It is still my intention to put a phone in every corner of this campus," he said.

Holmes said the cost for each phone is about $600, with an additional $27 monthly maintenance charge.

Student Government Association President Tracy Davis said although the fiscal crisis is a difficult issue, campus safety will not improve if the installation of more phones is delayed.

"The lighting situation is poor and there are still areas that don't have phones in close proximity with one another," she said. "Safety will not improve if we delay."

James got to Scott one more time and put the icing on the cake, 4-1, with 7:13 remaining. At least though, things should get a little easier for UMass as the season progresses.

"They're probably the toughest opponent we'll play this year," Bossio said.

ODU followed up its thrashing of UMass with a 3-1 victory over the University of New Hampshire yesterday. The Bonnies are now 4-0 and have won their last 14 games.

As for UMass, the Minutewomen can only shake their heads and hope they meet ODU at a later date. The Minutewomen, after yesterday's win are 3-1 and have three days off before their next game with Providence College at Totman Field on Thursday.

Up in the major leagues . . .

DiSarcina gets his chance with Angels

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Just over a week ago, Gary DiSarcina was like any other student at the University of Massachusetts, attending classes and working toward a degree in history.

But history will always be there. So DiSarcina can be excused for putting the books aside for awhile and chasing after a dream — to play major league baseball.

Most American boys have aspirations at one time in their lives of reaching "the show," playing in front of large crowds and hitting the home run that wins the World Series. But unlike the shattered hopes of most, DiSarcina's dream has been realized. He has made the major leagues with the California Angels.

Those who have followed DiSarcina throughout his career, himself included, are not surprised that he has reached the highest level of baseball, but that he did it so soon.

"Yeah, I'm a little surprised," DiSarcina said via phone interview from Chicago, where the Angels were playing the Chicago White Sox this weekend. "This year at the end of the year my manager said I was a year ahead of schedule. I was going to go to spring training next year."

"It surprises me, because he just left college," said younger brother Glenn DiSarcina, who took over where Gary left off and is currently the starting UMass shortstop. "But the way he's been going, who knows."

Some could say it's in the bloodlines for DiSarcinas to become solid shortstop prospects. Two decades ago, Gary's uncle Joe DiSarcina was the UMass shortstop and signed with the San Diego Padres. The elder DiSarcina eventually reached the Triple-A level before leaving baseball.

Former UMass coach Dick Bergquist had an inkling that DiSarcina would be a good player when he recruited him out of Billerica High School in 1985.

"I had his uncle here in 1969," Bergquist recalled. "But David Littlefield [former assistant coach and now a scout with the Detroit Tigers] was the one who actually recruited him.

"I thought he had excellent tools. We projected him to play shortstop, but he played a lot of second base in high school," Bergquist said. "His high school coach said that in high school, with decent pitching, more ground balls go to second."

But Bergquist decided that, with his strong arm and solid glove, shortstop was the place to be.

"When he got here, we really liked what we saw," he said. "I thought he had better skills than any infielder I'd had."

DiSarcina played a lot of fall baseball, but Bergquist didn't feel he was ready to start full-time as a freshman. He tried a few players at the position including Steve Allen, who is now trying to work his way up the minor league ladder as a relief pitcher for the Texas Rangers. But DiSarcina stuck out and won the job.

"After his freshman year we started touting him as one of the best in the East," Bergquist said. "I'm not saying he didn't make mistakes. But he had the skills and the baseball instinct. He knows the game well."

He also could hit consistently, something that helped speed his trip to the big leagues. After a rough rookie year (.253), DiSarcina improved to .350 as a sophomore and a team-high .366 as a junior, showing speed and power in the package. In his sophomore and junior years DiSarcina finished as an All-New England and All-Northeast selection.

"He had good pop in his bat and could drive the ball, especially to right-center," Bergquist said. "That's a good asset. It makes him use the whole field."

"He's a good consistent hitter," said UMass coach Mike Stone, who coached DiSarcina in his final season here. "He's like a Tommy Herr, always hitting at the same level. But Gary always seems to get better."

Stone was counting highly on DiSarcina to play for UMass last spring. He had been elected as a co-captain and would have been a key player in the UMass lineup. Instead, he was selected in the sixth round of the Amateur Draft by the Angels in June, 1988, and offered a substantial signing bonus. With the money on the table, DiSarcina decided to go for it.

The road to the majors had begun.

"I always felt that he had a shot," Stone said.

Often the first year or two of a young ballplayer's professional career can gauge whether he has any realistic hopes of making it. Part of the reason is the switch from aluminum bats, which almost every collegiate level player uses, to wooden bats, required at all levels of professional ball.

DiSarcina, always a disciplined hitter, made the adjustment smoothly, even as his glove work remained steady.

"We'd always taken batting practice with wood bats," Stone said. "So he'd used them before." DiSarcina also had played in the Cape Cod League, an amateur league which requires wooden bats.

DiSarcina spent the last season and a half toiling in the lower minor leagues in such remote spots as Bend, Or. and Midland, Texas. After completing his season at Double-A Midland a few weeks ago, he thought his season was over and decided to return home to resume his studies.

"They told me to just go home and rest and get ready for spring training," DiSarcina said. But that all changed last Saturday, when Angels' Director of Player Development Bill Bavasi contacted him at home and gave him the news.

On to Anaheim, Calif., and the big time.

DiSarcina becomes just the fourth former UMass player since 1967 to reach the majors. Pitchers Mike Flanagan (Toronto Blue Jays) and Jeff Reardon (Minnesota Twins) are still enjoying success today. First baseman Bob Hansen played for the Milwaukee Brewers in the early '70s.

> "I'd like to get my feet wet, get a little experience before next year . . . School's always going to be there. This is a can't-miss opportunity."
> – Gary DiSarcina

Upon arrival, DiSarcina spent his first days trying to get back into playing shape.

"I've been taking a lot of ground balls, but it's been kind of frustrating," he said. "I was in good shape two weeks ago, but I lose it fast."

The word was that the Angels were going to give him an immediate chance to win the shortstop job. Dick Schofield, the regular shortstop, has been inconsistent and was hurt this season. Kent Anderson has been unimpressive and Glenn Hoffman is aging at 34. DiSarcina, at the tender age of 21 and with a good chunk of experience behind him, was tabbed as the shortstop of the future.

Sometimes the exposure, the talent level and the pressure of playing in the major leagues can get to a player, and like a David Clyde or a Joe Charbonneau, they fizzle out fast. DiSarcina hasn't been affected at all by the new climate.

"It's really the same here, it's just a different level," he said. "You just play in front of a lot more people. I don't think I'm too much below their level. I'm just glad to be here."

DiSarcina has especially liked the atmosphere of the team. Although he's felt like an outsider at times, he says the team has gone out of its way to make him feel at home.

"Guys like Anderson and Hoffman are really nice," he said. "They help me out and it makes it so much easier. I've been treated excellently. I'm very impressed.

"It's a real close knit team, but it still is kind of weird," DiSarcina said. "I don't really feel like part of the team yet."

So far he hasn't been able to get into a game, which has caused some speculation that he is insurance in case the Angels can pull off a trade. Bavasi denies any such action is forthcoming, so DiSarcina feels his chance will come before too long.

"I'd like to get my feet wet, get a little experience before next year," DiSarcina said.

When he was first called up, every indication was that DiSarcina was going to be put to the test right away. In a way some people are surprised in that the Angels are still in the hunt for the American League West title, whereas a team like Seattle or Atlanta that is traditionally eliminated from contention by Memorial Day can afford to go with younger players.

If he is put into the heat of the pennant race, DiSarcina is ready to make the most of it, regardless of what pressure may be put on him.

"To a lot of people it is [a lot of pressure]," DiSarcina said. "But if you can't play in a pennant race, you can't play with pressure at all. It's a great way to learn, and find out about yourself."

While playing in Double-A this season, DiSarcina didn't keep track of how things were going with the parent club, and was somewhat surprised to see the success it was enjoying.

"I wasn't really following them. I was too busy with my own season," he said. "But we've got a good team here."

If the Angels were to make the playoffs, DiSarcina would not be eligible to play, having been recalled after the Sept. 1 deadline. He would be allowed to travel with the team, though. If they don't make it, he'll come back to UMass and resume being a regular student, just like everyone else.

"I'll probably come back and rest a little bit," he said. "I'll take an intersession course. It's too late for this semester, because I'm going to miss a whole month."

But that's a price he is more than willing to pay to realize his dream.

"School's always going to be there. This is a can't miss opportunity," DiSarcina said.

And Gary DiSarcina is hoping to seize that opportunity and maybe make a little history of his own.

Minutemen parlayed those gifts into three straight scores to turn a 21-17 halftime grind into a 42-17 laugher less than 12 minutes later.

"Early in the third quarter, they made some turnovers and that was the key," UMass coach Jim Reid said.

After taking the second half kickoff, Brunner marched the Engineers downfield with a couple of big hits to favorite target Rob Varano (12 catches, 174 yards). On the next play, Brunner went to his senior flanker again, but cornerback Garrick Amos stepped up and wrestled the ball out of Varano's hands at the UMass 25.

Baldacci then engineered a 14-play drive of his own, a smooth combo of quick-hit passes and ground plays. He finished it with a 4-yard flair to freshman tight end Bill Durkin. Marco Gabrielli's point-after was blocked, but the Minutemen were up, 27-17.

Following the kickoff, Brunner tried for Varano again, but linebacker George Karelas scooped up the low toss for another pickoff at the Lehigh 39. Four plays later, it was Baldacci hooking up with flanker Mike Tobin on a beautiful 25-yard over-the-shoulder pass to the left corner of the end zone.

Lehigh was able to move into UMass territory again before defensive tackle Steve Brothers rocked Torain after a 25-yard run and safety Pat Doran recovered the fumble.

A 21-yard option reverse to Tobin and a 25-yarder from Baldacci to Ron Blauvelt set UMass up again, and Baldacci legged the final 17 on an option keeper around the right side. To add insult to injury, the PAT snap was high but holder Blauvelt took it in for the two points to make it 42-17. Ballgame.

"I thought we made some decent adjustments in the second half," Reid said. "Joe Cullen did a great job plugging up the middle. I think we started getting more of a rush and got a little pressure on them."

"In the first half, we ran 'red' a lot, which is a three-man front," Cullen said. "We adjusted to two more men down, so more or less everybody was one-on-one."

Brunner had a field day with short dump passes, picking up steady chunks of yardage but never turning in the big one.

"We just never quit. That's the motto of our defense," Cullen said. "They made the big plays, but we never quit."

The day didn't start out so well for the Minutemen. Just as in last week's 28-all tie with James Madison, they took the opening drive straight downfield before the engine died. On the first two plays from scrimmage, tailback Allen Williams broke for 15 and fullback David Mitchell rumbled for 26 before most of the crowd had even arrived.

But with a third-and-goal from the two, Mitchell was stuffed for no gain and then squashed for a four-yard loss to turn the ball over. Lehigh proceeded to drive 94 yards with Torain capping it on a four-yard winner for a 7-0 edge.

The lead was short-lived, very short in fact, as Bledsoe took the next play from scrimmage and turned a simple draw play into an 85-yard TD down the left side. Center Al Pogarian sprung Bledsoe with a monster block about 10 yards downfield and the rest was up to Bledsoe's jet speed.

"I kept looking back, which was a mistake," Bledsoe said. "But I knew (the defender) wasn't going to catch me."

He added his second touchdown on a three-yard run in the second quarter to make it 14-7. Lehigh would regain the lead on a safety, a bad snap over punter Gabrielli's head that he downed in the end zone, and an ensuing one-yard dive by Torain.

Baldacci brought the Minutemen back right before halftime, hitting Chip Mitchell on a 22-yard TD play. Mitchell caught the ball around the 3-yard line and backed his way across the line while dragging two defenders.

Playing well defensively for the Minutemen were Doran and cornerback Don Caparotti, each with 12 tackles. Defensive tackle Chris Colclough and linebacker Matt Tulley each had two sacks.

Sullivan, Santiago and Kelly Ramsey are expected to carry the team during this growing period.

UMass would win the next set to tie the match at two apiece. But in the final set the Lady Stags would pull out some tough defense and top serves to take the match.

"We're still making system errors," Ford said. "I am responsible for the loss. Me and the girls. We can't beat other teams until we work out the bugs."

The Minutewomen go for their first win tomorrow night when they travel to Boston College (7 p.m.).

Again, Rieber demonstrated his striking abilities by dribbling through three Minutemen to face goalkeeper Jon Gruber one-on-one. Gruber was beaten with seven minutes left on the clock.

"Temple is a good team," said Gettler. "They're a physically hard team."

Temple has won the Atlantic 10 for the past two seasons and is currently is one of the top-five contenders for the division this year. "We lost to probably the best team in the league," Gettler said. "They played like champions."

rounded out the top 10 at 19:17. Freshman Maureen Meldrin, continued to show great promise, finishing 13th in her first collegiate meet at 19:24.

"It was a very competitive race with Boston College. Shana, Laura and Maureen all went out hard with BC," LaFreniere said.

The turning point of the race was at the two-mile point, according to LaFreniere.

"I was a little nervous at the mile, but at the two-mile our kids started to gain on the BC group and went hard the rest of the way," she said.

Junior Kathy Holt took 15th for the Minutewomen at 19:30 and sophomore Michelle St. Laurent was UMass' sixth runner at 20:07.

"Michelle went out hard, but faded. I still like the way she ran, because it will make her a stronger runner," LaFreniere said. Junior Cathy Crocker (24th in 20:40) and first-year sophomore Tara Hughes (26th in 20:51) rounded out the top eight for UMass.

LaFreniere is clearly optimistic about the rest of the season. "We've only practiced 10 days and we tied BC without a top runner. When Precious gets back in full shape, she'll be up front and we can expect great things from Becky Johnson," she said. "We'll be in the top five in New England."

After eight straight years of dual-meet losses to BC this was UMass' best showing against the Eagles. With six teams that the Minutewomen beat last season plus a meet against powerhouse Providence College, LaFreniere's team will have an excellent series of litmus tests for their season before the New England Championships.

Women's soccer sweeps a pair

Editor's note: Because of deadline restraints, full details of this weekend's action were not available. Check tomorrow's Collegian for a complete wrap-up.

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team swept a pair of games this weekend at Cornell Invitational in Ithaca, NY.

Saturday, the Minutewomen knocked off the host Big Red, 2-0. Yesterday, UMass battled the University of Wisconsin, the team which eliminated the Minutewomen from the NCAA playoffs last season. Getting a bit of revenge, UMass came home with a 2-1 win.

UMass did not win the tournament championship, however. Colorado College also won a pair of games and took the title by virtue of goals scored.

With the wins, the Minutewomen are now 3-2 on the year.

Minutemen ruin Lehigh celebration, 42-23

The UMass defense held back Lehigh University Saturday as the Minutemen prevailed, 42-23 in Bethlehem, PA.

Bledsoe has career day; turnovers help Minutemen

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

BETHLEHEM, Pa. — The next time Lehigh University decides to throw a party, you can bet the University of Massachusetts football team won't be very high on the guest list.

Saturday, the Engineers were celebrating their 1,000th game and the opening of the newly-built Murray H. Goodman Stadium. But right from the start things went wrong. Rain fell, only 6,000 people bothered to show, and the Minutemen finished the gloom by rolling to a 42-23 win.

The buzzings around town prior to the game were such that UMass wouldn't be able to match up with Lehigh. What with a monster front line and that "huge" 42-7 win over quasi Division I-AA opponent Fordham the week before, the Engineers thought they had this one in the can. But they had changed faces when it was all over.

"Massachusetts is an awfully good football team," said Lehigh coach Hank Small. "You could tell how good they were by their ability to move the ball."

Move it the Minutemen did, mainly behind the efforts of junior tailback Jerome Bledsoe (19 carries, 209 yards and two touchdowns) and fifth-year senior quarterback Roger Baldacci (17-of-24 passing, 199 yards and three touchdowns). UMass amassed 525 yards in total offense for the day.

Lehigh kept up with the Minutemen by piling up 518 yards, mostly behind the work of senior quarterback Todd Brunner (35 of 56, 426 yards). However, as well as he was able to move the ball, he often coughed it up by throwing four interceptions, or watched as his team stalled drives with key penalties (10 for 75 yards).

"In the second half, we didn't get stopped once," Small said. "Penalties and turnovers stopped us."

None more crucial than a stretch in the third quarter when Brunner was picked off twice and tailback Erick Torain fumbled in a span of just six offensive plays. The

Field hockey falls to Old Dominion, tops JMU

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

After the Bonnies of Old Dominion University hit the University of Massachusetts over the head with a wooden shoe on Saturday, booting UMass 4-1 at ODU's Foreman Field, the Minutewomen rebounded with a 1-0 win over James Madison University on the same field yesterday.

JMU was a far cry away from the team that UMass played the day before. ODU is the defending national champion. The Minutewomen outshot the Dukes 25-4 and drew 10 penalty corners as opposed to JMU's three. But still, the coaching staff was not happy.

"We had a lot of opportunities," UMass assistant coach Patti Bossio said. "We just couldn't finish it. We really should have scored three or four goals."

The lone goal was scored by senior midfielder Kathy DeAngelis, her fourth of the season. Junior Beth Thornton was credited with an assist.

Freshman Phillipa Scott got the call from Hixon for the third straight game to handle the goaltending duties and enjoyed an easy day, picking up a shutout for just four saves.

However, the day before was not so easy for Scott and the rest of the Minutewomen. The stats are about in reverse order with ODU outshooting UMass 23-7 and drawing 13 penalty corners to just one for UMass.

Scott made 14 saves during ODU's bombardment before the Minutewomen lost for the first time this season.

It was the Dutch recruits of Maike Hilbrand and Winny Sanderas that were the thorns in UMass' side. The Minutewomen had jumped out to an early lead when senior co-captain Kathy Derwin scored the game's first goal with 20:11 left in the first half.

But with 6:02 left, Hilbrand tied the game up when she blasted a shot past Scott on a penalty corner. Carolyn Sarr and Sanderas assisted on the play.

That left the second half as the deciding stage of the game with the game tied up 1-1 when the first half ran out. The last 35 minutes turned out to be all ODU.

"In the second half, they (the Bonnies) just came out on fire," Bossio said. "We played well in the first half but we ran out of gas."

The Bonnies' tank was still full though, and with super unleaded. Kelly James started things off less than two minutes into the second, beating Scott to put the Bonnies up 2-1 with 33:06 left.

Hilbrand followed shortly thereafter with her second goal of the game, giving ODU an insurance goal, 3-1 with 31 minutes left. Hilbrand was assisted on the play again by Sanderas.

There was still plenty of time left for UMass to break ODU goaltender Kathy Fosina, but the Minutemen just could not get to Fosina who finished the day with four saves.

Women's x-country runs even with BC

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Despite coming out of their first meet with a 17-54 loss to Yale University and a 54-54 tie against Boston College, coach Julie LaFreniere feels last Thursday's race was a harbinger of good things to come for the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team.

"The race was like a workout for Yale. But we tied BC without one of our best runners," LaFreniere said.

She was referring to superb freshman Becky Johnson, who sprained an ankle two days before the meet but will be ready in time for Saturday's race against Springfield College.

The big story, as often seems to be the case recently, was the performance of sophomore Precious Hill. After not training all summer and having just 10 days of practice, Hill placed second for UMass and ninth overall, negotiating the Franklin Park 5,000-meter course in 19:10.

"Precious was simply phenomenal. She started off easily and made up a lot of ground the last two miles," said LaFreniere, who hardly seems surprised by what Hill does anymore.

After Yale took five of the top six spots in the race (a BC runner took fourth), senior captain Shana Smith grabbed the top spot for UMass (seventh) with a time of 19:01. Hill ran ninth and junior Laura Lavallee

Men's soccer tripped by Temple

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Correspondent

They haven't done it — yet. Win a game this season — on the road, that is. Whether the question is are they the stuff-of-the-Atlantic-10 or are they simply "home"-bodies, it doesn't really matter.

The road is an unsettling place for some as is the case with the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team which fell 3-0 to Temple University this Saturday. Head coach Jeff Gettler and his troops haven't beaten Temple in the four years they've competed. The Minutemen now stand 0-3-0 for the season.

"This was a big one." said Gettler. "We didn't play that poorly. We just haven't found a way to win on the road."

On a rain-soaked field, early in the game, forward Steve Cesnek took a shot from six yards out only to be overtimed on the cross right flank by Temple goalkeeper Kevin Costello. Temple continued to impress upon UMass, not only their style of play but also their sheer physical fortitude. With nine minutes left in the first half, Temple's Scott Rieber assisted Kennedy Torres to score the first goal of the game. The score remained 1-0 to the half.

Fourteen minutes later, Rieber squared up on a free kick which hit the goal post. Following through his teammate's play, Istkak Akkor buried the ball deep into the net to bring the score to 2-0, Temple. Corner kicks contributed to Temple's scoring opportunities as they had three, compared to UMass' one.

Volleyball tipped by Fairfield

Wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss, but cheerly seek how to redress their harms.
— Bill Shakespeare, Henry VI

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

For the University of Massachusetts volleyball team, now is a time to "redress their harms."

Friday night the Minutewomen traveled to Fairfield, Conn. to take on Fairfield University and despite a close match, dropped a five-set match, 6-15, 7-15, 15-8, 15-13, 12-15. But the team had much to feel good, or at least better, about.

UMass was coming off of a season-opening loss to the University of Hartford in which little, if anything, went right. That loss made the Fairfield match a test of the team's character.

"The team has got a great attitude," said UMass coach Carol Ford. "Our problem has not been a lack of desire."

The Minutewomen came out sloppy in the first game. "We did not do much of anything," Ford said. "We lost a bunch of points because the pass wasn't there."

It was more of the same in game two, but in game three UMass would find its footing to win its first set of the season. Nancy Sullivan again had a great match as she and Juliet Santiago helped push UMass over the edge.

Wiesel packs a full house, urges self respect, awareness

Elie Wiesel at the Fine Arts Center last night.

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Some 48 years ago in the little town of Sighet, Transylvania, a little boy lay waiting to hear the voice of the Beadle, a beloved but poor man who worked at a Hasidic synagogue.

The Beadle would move "from street to street and house to house," in the early hours of the day. He knocked on windows and doors calling, "Jews get up for the service," urging them to rise and go to the synagogue to pray.

This is a memory of a different life for Nobel Laureate Elie Wiesel, who survived years in a Nazi concentration camp during World War II.

The Beadle, along with millions of others, existed in a time before the onslaught of the Holocaust during World War II, during which millions of Jews were executed by Adolf Hitler and the Nazis. A time, Wiesel said, when the world "was standing by."

"I would give much of what I have to hear that voice again," said Wiesel, whose presence drew more than 2,500 people to the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center concert hall and Rand Theater last night for a lecture on human rights.

"Today it is the writer, the teacher, the militant, the activist, who perform the same task," he said. "It is his and her duty to go from street to street, house to house, student to student, and say, 'Get up, get up. Wake up because it is dangerous to sleep.'"

Winner of the 1986 Nobel Peace Prize, Wiesel is the author of 32 books and the recipient of numerous human rights awards. He is currently a professor at Boston University.

Wiesel's gentle but compelling demeanor subtly drew in the crowd, as he relayed stories of famine and courage, of the triumph of good and the absolute presence of evil. He spoke little of his own experience in Nazi concentration camps.

He urged the audience to harbor self-respect and take notice of the events around them, pointing out the "scandal called apartheid" in South Africa.

"Sleep today, when so many things are happening in the world, induces ... complacency, which is dangerous," he said.

Wiesel, who has visited the University numerous times, discussed the racial problems experienced here over the past years between African-Americans and Jewish people as well as other groups on campus.

"The conflicts and misunderstandings invade every

Lester traces troublesome road toward Judaism

By BRIAN PURCELL
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts Professor Julius Lester shared his spiritual experience of converting to Judiasm with an engrossed audience at Amherst College last Thursday.

Lester, the son of a Methodist minister, said even as a small child in Kansas City and Nebraska, he had an interest in the Bible. But he had trouble accepting the teachings of the New Testament and instead identified with the earlier heroes of the Bible, including King David and Samuel, he said.

He became despondent during his first college years because he felt that he was an atheist, he said. However in his sophomore year a friend brought him to a Jewish synagogue where he was able to view the scrolls. He said sensing the sacredness of the writings moved him.

"All I know is I wanted to remain in that love," he said.

His interest in theology grew from that point on, but he still wasn't sure what branch of religion he wanted to believe.

After college, he spent almost 14 years in New York City, where he became active in the Civil Rights Movement. It was a difficult period because of tension between Jewish and Black people, he said.

"It was a time that was too big to grasp, the events that shook the soul happened too frequently," he said.

While producing a radio show at a New York station, he aired material that contained anti-Semitic messages along with an explanation — he wanted to highlight that positive communication was needed between Blacks and Jews. His statement resulted in controversy and many newspapers labeled him anti-Semitic, he said.

Later in life Lester began studying the Holocuast. He said he wanted to see if he could learn a lesson as a Black man. This reinforced his belief in Judaism, he said.

He said although many of his opponents were Jewish, he received much support from Jewish friends.

Lester said he felt he was called to Judiasm after learning from his personal experiences and from learning and teaching the religion.

"I had wanted to be a Jew but I had resisted, so I continued to study the Torah, but that wasn't enough," he said.

Finally, in 1982, after studying with Rabbi Yechiael Lander of the Northampton Helen Hills Chapel, he made the conversion to Judiasm.

"Along with the tales of horror I heard the tales of Jewish faith transcending that horror," he said.

Lester said he had fears of being rejected because he wasn't born into the faith, but found himself truly accepted. As far as being a Black Jew, he said, "I never felt a need to prove my blackness to anyone."

Lester, a full professor of Judaic and Near East studies, and former professor in the Afro-American Department, has published seventeen volumes, including his most recent Lovesong: Becoming a Jew.

He is a recipient of the Newberry Honor Medal, National book Award Finalist and the National 1985 Professor of the Year Silver Medal by the council for Advancement and Support of Education.

He will lecture again at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in Wright Hall Common Room at Smith College.

Lester's lecture, 'My Spiritual Odyssey," in Converse Hall was sponsored by the Smith/Amherst Colleges B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations.

Lester is very active in the Jewish community, including the Congregation B'nai Israel where he often serves as Cantor (a layman who reads the scriptures). He has applied his experiences to his teaching at UMass, and said that he discusses the oppression of both Blacks and Jews in his Blacks and Jews course.

Punishment worsens for seven protesters arrested last spring

Seven University of Massachusetts students arrested last spring for takeovers in protest of Defense Department-financed research at the University have missed the deadline to submit plans designed for disciplinary action against them, Gladys Rodriguez, associate dean of students said yesterday.

About 39 of the 72 UMass students arrested last spring are required to perform 15 to 70 hours of community service. Students may reduce the length of service by paying $150 to $300 fines.

Rodriguez said the students, whose names were not released, risk stiffer

"They will have hearings for further charges for failing to comply," she said. "They will certainly have higher fines than what they started with."

penalties for their failure to meet the deadline.

She said the additional penalties range from increased community service hours to possible suspension.

The students are being penalized for six separate building and office takeovers staged last spring. About 152 people from the area were arrested during the demonstrations.

Chen condemns cigarette exports to Asia

Prof says no to smoking

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor is in Washington today continuing his testimony before Congress against the export of American cigarettes to Asia.

Dr. Ted Chen, a professor at the School of Public Health, is scheduled to speak before the House Subcommittee on Transportation and Hazardous Materials, concluding the testimony he began last Wednesday.

Chen is in Washington representing the American Public Health Association, a group advocating for the anti-smoking movement in America, he said. Chen is a member of APHA's executive board.

Chen has been involved in the movement against smoking for about 20 years.

He is also the executive secretary for the Asia Pacific Association for the Control of Tobacco (APACT), a group of public health professionals and anti-smoking activists from Taiwan, Korea, Japan, Hong Kong and the United States. The group is working to create a smoke-free Asia by the year 2000, according to a statement released by the group.

Award winning local author Leslea Newman will offer two writing workshops in Northampton for women this fall, Write From the Heart, a workshop for women who always wanted to write but never knew what to say, as well as for women who know what to say, but not how to say it. Woman fined for damaging magazines

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — A Northampton woman, who said she sprayed glue on 44 magazines at an Amherst book store because she considered them pornographic, has been ordered to pay $205 in restitution to the store owner.

Sandra L. Goodman, 28, submitted to facts sufficient to warrant a guilty finding on a reduced charge of malicious destruction of property Friday in Northampton District Court.

In a prepared statement read to the court, she contended that the magazines she destroyed in January were pornographic and contributed to violence against women.

"In this Commonwealth it is still legal to sell this kind of garbage and that's what it is," said Judge Alvertus Morse, but he said that he couldn't excuse her vandalism.

Goodman was arrested during the first of a series of protests at the Amherst Newsroom, a bookstore in downtown Amherst, which also sells magazines and cards.

The Newsroom, which is owned by the Holyoke News Company, has a marked section in the back of the store, where about a 100 magazines are shelved, under a sign prohibiting people under 18 from buying them. The magazines lay on shelves which make it impossible to fully see the covers. Some of the titles include Playboy, Playgirl, Penthouse, and Hustler.

People picketed outside the Newsroom on several occassions last spring, contending that the magazines in the back section are pornographic and should not be sold because, the protesters said, pornography contributes to violence against women.

Donna Rose, manager of the Newsroom at the time, said in February, "We believe [the protesters] have every right to be out there. We believe in the First Amendment, and that people have the right to read what they choose."

New law to reduce toxins

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Correspondent

With the help of MassPIRG, a law was passed this summer aimed at eliminating a number of toxic pollutants emitted into the air in Massachusetts.

On July 24, Gov. Michael Dukakis signed the Toxics Use Reduction Act Law. It has been hailed the most progressive anti-pollution law in the country by local governments.

Members of the University of Massachusetts chapter of MassPIRG gave presentations to local town governments and businesses attempting to win support for the bill, according to Aaron Rome, UMass campus coordinator of the lobbying.

Lawmakers hope the act will cut the amount of hazardous waste in Massachusetts in half by 1997, Rome said. The law says that companies using extensive amounts of toxic chemicals must report the amount of chemicals used, where they go and how the reduction of these is planned.

At the University of Lowell, the Toxics Use Reduction Institute will be conducting long-term research on the development and education of pollution prevention programs.

Lax companies will undergo stronger enforcement and inspections by the state Department of Environmental Protection to meet toxic use reductions goals, according to a MassPIRG report.

Companies that use toxic chemicals will pay a yearly fee, according to the law. The fees, totalling $4-5 million yearly, will fund new programs.

The law also gives citizens and employees the right to review plan summaries and interviews of companies. They are also allowed to request that the DEP inspect a company's plans and sue if the law is not enforced.

Denise Hawthorne of UMass MassPIRG said, there is a victim compensation provision in the law, which has not been finalized. It states families of victims and victims themselves will be compensated by the employer for any problems resulting from hazardous material.

The Leverett Board of Health, the Leverett select Board, Pelham Board of Selectment, Sunderland's Conservation Commision and Board of Selectment and members of MassPIRG, all supporters of the law, see this a positive sign.

Rome said, "Businesses are coming out in support of the law. We think it will work well."

Area firms directly affected by this new law are Monsanto Company in Springfield, a manufacturer of synthetics, and James River Graphics in Hadley.

John Link, member of the Leverett Board of Health said the Leverett community supported the law mainly because the citizens were concerned about the environment.

"In principle, the Board of Health and Board of Selectmen see it as the best thing for our economy," he said.

Plans made to improve education

BY PATRICK M. MANSEAU
Collegian Correspondent

Superintendent of the Amherst-Pelham schools, Dr. Gus A. Sayer, spoke on Excellence in Education at the Fort River Elementary School in Amherst last Wednesday night.

The forum was presented by the League of Women Voters to give the new superintendent an opportunity to discuss his plans for the maintaining of quality in the communities' educational system.

Dr. Sayer's speech highlighted several areas of concern including the need for more minority faculty, expanding existing childcare programs, and increased school-community interaction.

There was some concern about lagging math skills and a need for improvements in school curriculum. Dr. Sayer said students aren't "moved on to interesting things in math quickly enough." He hopes to see more use of computers in the classroom.

Unfortunately, budget reductions that "came very late," eliminated equipment funds that had been earmarked for the purchase of computers and computer training for teachers, Sayer said.

Student senate plans to discuss salary limits

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting could be more entertaining to some than TV's "The Wonder Years," with a proposal concerning Student Government Association officials' salaries and five different motions by Student Attorney General Robert Fadel.

A proposal by Budgets Committee Chairperson Karen Talbot, Student Government Association President Tracy Davis and Fadel promises to be controversial, said John Dunlap, the senate speaker.

The proposal seeks to limit the salary of any publicly elected SGA position to $3.75 an hour.

Some SGA officials, particularly in area governments, have been known to earn more than the standard SGA stipend, Dunlap said.

"It's awful," Dunlap said. "Some people are taking up more than a quarter of their payroll in budget."

Davis agreed. "What kind of money does that leave for programming?" she said.

Dunlap said he expects area government presidents to oppose the proposal.

The five motions forwarded by Fadel were on last week's agenda but were tabled for one week, as stipulated by the SGA constitution, which says that a motion dealing with SGA Bylaws must be tabled for a week to enable senators to review the proposal.

One of his motions would restructure Judicial Affairs Committee which formulates and reviews legislation concerning the campus-wide judicial system, Fadel said.

He said the committee has not been functioning and the proposed changes, which include removing the two advocates and two judges from the committee, will make it 'active in its fullest capacity."

Another of Fadel's motions will amend the number of undergraduates needed to have tribunals of the University Judiciary review any decision by the Student Senate.

The constitution presently requires a petition by 25 students for the judiciary to review a decision. Fadel's proposal changes that number to one student.

"If even one student has a problem with a decision," Fadel said, "we should have to review it."

Dunlap said the senate meetings are open to the public and hopes more undergraduates will attend in the future.

He said he would also like to see senators being advised by their constituents during the senate to make sure students have direct input in the voting procedure.

The Student Senate meetings are scheduled to meet at 7 p.m. Wednesdays. This week's meeting will be in room 101 in the Campus Center.

Police said the man was uncooperative, combative and smelled heavily of alcohol.

In other police reports:

- University of Massachusetts police Saturday arrested Philip J. Hewitt, 20, of Roslindale, on a warrant issued by the Boston Police Department for failure to appear on assault and battery charges, police said. Bail was set at $1,000 cash, police said.
- Police arrested Brian S. White, 19, of Rutland, Friday on charges of being a minor in possession of alcohol.
- Police arrested Paul J. Sweeney, 19, of Beverly, Friday outside of Hampden Dining Commons on charges of being a minor in possession of alcohol. He was carrying one open beer and three full beers, police said.
- A double edged knife was confiscated from an 18-year-old male Saturday at the Maze, police said.
- Two 19-year-old men, neither UMass students, were seen by police entering Moore Residence Hall with a street sign from Amherst. Police requested a show-cause hearing for the men.
- The Environmental Health and Safety Department and the Amherst Fire Department responded Saturday to a fire in a trash can in Lewis Residence Hall. Police are investigating the fire.

Bush speaks extensively on American affairs

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — President Bush defended the slow pace of arms negotiations with the Soviet Union on Monday, and said "it's not time for normalcy" in relations with China, despite a gradual increase in contacts since last summer's bloody crackdown on student dissent in Beijing.

In a wide-ranging session with reporters in the ornate Senate chamber of the Montana legislature, Bush said reforms in Hungary had made it possible to extend new economic privileges to the Communist nation.

The president was emphasizing environmental issues in a three-state swing to South Dakota, Montana and Washington, defending his decision not to travel to Alaska to view the oil spill damage in Prince William Sound.

He said he was hopeful that "winter will be kind" in restoring environmental conditions in Alaskan waters. He said he's sent his "environmental vice president" to inspect the clean-up efforts and predicted that Exxon would "come back" next spring if further clean-up was necessary.

The president also vowed to fight on the floor of the Democratic-controlled House to win passage of his plan for a cut in the capital gains tax, and said his plan is "not as my critics say, a tax that will help the rich."

Asked why there hadn't been more progress on a strategic arms agreement, Bush said he had put more early emphasis on conventional arms. Soviet foreign minister Eduard Shevardnadze has been critical of the Bush administration for not advancing

Exiled student leader still worried about homeland

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — An exile's life is not what Wu'er Kaixi wanted, but he took a leading role in China's student uprising last spring and when the dust has settled was on government's most-wanted list, forced to flee.

Wu'er, a promising student at Beijing Normal University, made a dangerous 10-day journey to escape his homeland. Now he's starting over as a student at Harvard University, but he told The Associated Press his eye is still on the battle back home.

"If you experience that kind of massacre it changes your life," said Wu'er. "Whenever I think of my friends who were murdered in Tiananmen Square, I feel the obligation."

The China Information Center here is now his focus. It's through this hub's telephones, fax machines and computers that he works to affect change back home.

The task has become more difficult since June, when the events in Beijing riveted the world and millions saw Wu'er's drawn face as he stood up to Premier Li Peng and demanded a dialogue.

It seemed the whole world was listening.

Then came the quiet morning after troops stormed the square, killing hundreds, maybe thousands. Only a few who fled could carry on in the wake of such force.

He and his girlfriend navigated China's backroads for 10 days before they finally reached the South China Sea and what seemed the only route to go.

"The first step I took was into the sea, and I knew that I wouldn't go back" he said. "I didn't feel anything because it was just after the massacre and my feelings were already frozen."

Those few, bloody days last spring also numbed the Chinese people, but they did not cower, Wu'er said.

"This is a famous face now," the tall, muscular man said.

"But in the city and in the country, the people protected me. Even people who I didn't know kept quiet and immediately showed support," said JWu'er, who tried to find a way out of the country from eight cities before succeeding.

"So many people died, that the people can't forget or forgive this," he said. "There will be change, but it depends on political chance."

He and many other exiled students, their supporters and those who remain at work underground in China, are getting the word out and forming unions.

"We aren't organized officially, of course, because the government doesn't want it," said Wu'er, who refused to provide many details on the escape. "But we can establish a voice outside China."

The people didn't like the government before, but dislike has been displaced by hatred since their sons and daughters were gunned down in June, Wu'er said.

He said that on a recent trip to Paris he helped form a group called The Front for Democratic China as a central organization to coordinate efforts outside of China. He said a congress would be held later this month in Paris to set an agenda and elect a governing board.

China's largest newspaper recently featured Wu'er, complete with various statements about his character - all derisive. But the insults don't vex him.

"They're paying a lot of attention to what we're doing outside. And that means they're scared," said Wu'er.

Wu'er says chance played a large part in his own place in the spotlight.

He doesn't want to talk about his family now;' they could be in danger. But they were intellectuals and Wu'er has an ear cocked when they discussed politics at home.

"When I was a freshman (in Beijing) I loved beer and parties, like American kids," he said. "But the political and economic situation forced me to think about the country's system.

"I stood in the front because I care about my self-worth," Wu'er, who will study English in his first semester at Harvard, said through a translator. "I stood in front because the government doesn't allow the Chinese people to realize their own self-worth."

Kentucky teenager surrenders after holding eleven hostages

McKEE, Ky. (AP) – An armed teen-ager stalked into a high school classroom, fired a shot at the ceiling and took 11 classmates hostage Monday, police and witnesses said. After a day-long standoff, he released them all and surrendered.

Several shots were fired, but no one was injured in the confrontation, which began about 9:50 a.m., police said. There were conflicting reports that a shot was fired at a television new helicopter.

The youth, whose only request to police was to speak to his father, told his hostages he did not want to hurt anyone. The final two hostages were freed shortly after 5 p.m. EDT., and the teen-ager gave up about an hour and a half later, authorities said.

The state police declined to identify the hostage-taker, but classmates said he was Brian Pierce, a 17 year old senior at Jackson County High School. McKee is a town of 250 people about 50 miles southeast of Lexington in the Appalachian foothills

Pierce, who released his hostages throughout the day in exchange for items such as food, soft drinks and cigarettes, "said he wasn't going to hurt nobody," according to Craig Eversole, a classmate who was held but released. "He said he wasn't going to shoot nobody."

Ten injured in swimming pool as roof collapses at YMCA

BOSTON (AP) – Nine small boys and a teen-age lifeguard in a swimming class were injured Monday when part of a roof collapsed into a YMCA swimming pool, authorities said.

Three of the children, all 3 and 4 years old, and the lifeguard were hospitalized as a result of the accident, which left a jagged 20-by-15 foot hole in the roof of the boxy, brick West Roxbury-Roslindale YMCA.

Some parents were watching their children take a swimming lesson when a rain of cement chunks and beams fell into the water in the shallow end of the 55-meter pool just before 2 p.m.

"We were looking through a picture window down the other end, and then the whole roof over the shallow end just came down in one piece," said John Welch, whose son, Michael, was not injured in the accident.

Dukakis and House leaders attempt to reduce state deficit

BOSTON (AP) – Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and House Democratic leaders agreed Monday that instead of working on competing budget plans, they will try to reach a consensus on a $300 million package to reduce the state deficit.

Dukakis said he would hold off announcing his own plan for spending cuts and revenue increases so he and his staff could work with House Speaker George Keverian, D-Everett, and other Democratic legislators to try to come up with a mutually acceptable package.

"I like the spirit. I think there is a genuine desire to work together, to come together," Dukakis said. "We will try to work as closely as we can with the leadership."

Keverian also said he felt the mood had improved between Dukakis and some legislative Democrats.

"I think he may be right. People get tired of meanspiritedness and I think there has been a lot of that," Keverian said.

But both men, who talked separately with reporters, said there was no guarantee an agreement would be reached.

Mother Teresa still in pain

CALCUTTA, India (AP) – Mother Teresa suffered chest pains again Monday, and her doctors said a temporary pacemaker had not improved her heart condition.

Nevertheless, a medical bulletin issued by the Woodlands Nursing Home late Monday said Mother Teresa, who won a Nobel Peace Prize for her work with the poor, was better and resting.

Doctors said a persistent fever afflicting the 79 year old Roman Catholic nun seemed under control.

"Everything seems to be heading in the right direction, but her anginal pain is causing anxiety," said Dr. George Lombardi, a specialist in infectious diseases from Cornell University.

Hugo leaves 9 dead in eastern Caribbean

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) – Hurricane Hugo's 125 mph winds pounded Puerto Rico on Monday after ripping across other islands in the eastern Caribbean and leaving at least nine people dead and thousands homeless.

The National Weather Service said Hugo, the most powerful storm to hit the region this decade, slammed into the eastern tip of Puerto Rico and skirted the northern coast before roaring to the northwest toward the Bahamas.

Its winds overturned cars and stripped roof off of houses and office buildings and sent chunks of concrete plunging into streets in San Juan, where one-third of the U.S. commonwealth's 3.3 million people live. Fifty airplanes were reported destroyed at the airport in Isla Verde.

There was widespread damage in San Juan's Condado Beach area, the site of many of the island's large tourist hotels.

Hugo cut power and disrupted international communications to the island.

Looting by youths was reported, and there were police patrols downtown to prevent mobs from breaking into stores.

There were no immediate reports of casualties.

"We're getting ravaged," said ham radio operator Fernando Garcia in San Juan, Puerto Rico. "Part of my aluminum siding is gone, my next door neighbor's aluminum siding is gone."

The storm blew out the windows in The Associated Press office on a peninsula between the Caribbean and San Juan harbor, destroying its computers and office equipment. One staffer said he saw his furniture blown out the windows of his apartment on the 20th story of his building.

At 3 p.m. EDT, Hugo's center was near latitude 19.2 degrees north and longitude 66.7 west, or about 70 miles northwest of San Juan, said the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla. Hugo was moving at 15 mph to the west-northwest. Hurricane-force winds extended up to 75 miles from its center.

Meteorologist Jesse Moore at the National Hurricane Center said it was too early to tell whether Hugo would strike the U.S. mainland. He said the storm was expected to be off the southeastern Bahamas by Wednesday and "after that, it's anybody's guess."

Police said a man was electrocuted in Puerto Rico when he touched a power line while removing a television antenna from his roof in preparing for the storm.

Five people were reported killed, 80 injured and more than 10,000 homeless Sunday on the French island of Guadeloupe, relief officials said. Corrugated steel roofs were torn off, power lines ripped free and crops were destroyed. Two people were killed in Antigua and one in Montserrat, according to Beacon Radio in Anguilla. Ham radio operators reported at least five deaths in Montserrat, but there was no official confirmation.

Nearly all of Montserrat's 12,000 residents were homeless and without food or fresh water, said ham radio operator Stuart Haimes of Queens, N.Y. Schools, hospitals and the police department on the British island suffered serious damage, Haimes said.

circle in our society. Even here. It happens everywhere," he said. "Today, in 1989, we must do whatever we can to abolish certain ways and come closer to one another and respect each other's dignity."

A handful of Palestinian students and supporters passed out flyers before the lecture in a "plea to Elie Wiesel," for his comment on the ongoing dissent in Israel over Palestinians' bid for an autonomous state.

Wiesel offered understanding to the students in his lecture, but warned them that comparing the Palestinians' situation to Hitler's rampage is "wrong."

"Anyone who uses these comparisons should know what he or she doesn't know," he said. "What it meant to be a victim of Naziism, to see the killer standing there, killing, killing, and killing with the world standing by."

The lecture was hosted by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at UMass. It was sponsored by local supporters Herman and Judith B. Swartz.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

I came, I saw and got stoned in the West Bank

AL-BIREH, Occupied West Bank — It started out as a joke on the airplane as we flew over the Atlantic. We'd all win Pulitzers for our articles on being bombarded by rocks heaved by Palestinian youths in the West Bank.

David R. Mark

What started as humor became reality, leaving me more sure than ever that the Intifada is undeserving of the world attention it has received.

As our bus was leaving the refugee camp, the Palestinian children we had just talked to and taken photographs of began tossing rocks at us. Along with the rocks came pieces of cement from a nearby demolition site, they were the size of footballs. In all, about five kids through things at us.

The bus was clearly marked as belonging to the United Nations, which gives tours of West Bank refugee camps, including this small, overcrowded Palestinian village.

The U.N. is supposed to be a neutral organization. In fact, the U.N. representatives we met were sickenly pro-Palestinian.

What was upsetting about the representatives was that they were obviously lying. A truck backfired several feet up a hill near us, but the U.N. representative from Australia said gunfire like that occurs all the time. He then told us about the time a sickly three year-old girl stuck her head out of an open window to watch a riot between Palestinians and Israeli soldiers.

"A soldier walked up toward the girl and shot her in the head," he said. None in our group, Christian or Jew, believed him.

In spite of the useless rhetoric from the U.N., we thought we had gotten a fair representation of a refugee camp. There were no riots. School was in session, and with the U.N. providing free health care and food to any Palestinian living in the West Bank, the people we saw looked healthy.

Then the rocks came, and the image changed.

"Don't throw rocks at them," a Palestinian working for the U.N. told the kids in Arabic. "These are our friends. They are foreigners, not Jews."

The people on the bus, including those sympathetic to the Palestinians, were not impressed.

After we left the camp, I spoke with the U.N. bus driver, a Palestinian who spoke broken English.

"Would this occur in Jordan?" I asked.

"No. If this were Jordan, people in the Intifada would be killed."

"So why is there an Intifada?"

"It's not that Israel is more tolerant . . . but as a democracy, [Israel] allows the Intifada to occur."

"Aren't Palestinians Jordanian?"

"The people are Jordanian, but they don't feel close to Jordan and Jordan does not want to help them."

The man, who did not want to identify himself, said the Intifada will continue until Israel gives the Palestinians the West Bank. Throughout the country, however, we were given reason to believe the Intifada is waning.

- Shops owned by Palestinians in Jerusalem were opened for tourists even during afternoon hours when a strike is imposed.
- A U.N. representative admitted money for the Intifada from Arab and Asian countries has waned in recent months.
- Reporters from The New York Times and CBS News told us the Intifada is becoming less of a world issue, meaning less coverage.
- The "Quisling" incident, which made the Palestinian Liberation Organization look awful in the world press.

In short, it's over. Good riddance.

First Amendment "trash"

Senator Joe Schmo was filled with anticipation and pride. Today his son, an art student, was coming to Capital Hill to have lunch with him. He couldn't wait to show off his son's work.

Meredith O'Brien

"Hi Dad!," Joe Jr. yelled as he breezed into the office unannounced. "Wait 'til you see my sketchings, they won first place in the art contest at school!"

As the senator looked up from his desk to greet Joe Jr., he was appalled. Joe Jr. was wearing ripped jeans and a bleached t-shirt. His hair was tossled and he had a day's worth of stubble on his face — hardly the sort of appearance that the senator had anticipated to impress his friends.

"Son, how come you didn't dress for the occasion? You know that I was planning on taking you to the Congressional . . ."

"Dad, you gotta see these," Joe Jr. continued as he opened his attache case, pulling his sketchings out and putting them on the senator's desk.

"Well, I'll take a quick glance Son but then we have to . . ." his voice trailed off. His eyes widened and his mouth dropped. "What the hell is this stuff?!"

"They're my sketchings Dad. I really tried to put myself, my feelings into these. My professors really loved them."

"Absolutely disgusting," the senator mumbled under his breath as feelings of nausea fueled his outrage. "It's this sort of thing that we are trying to outlaw! It's both repugnant and morally indecent!"

Stunned into silence, Joe Jr. began to gather his sketchings together.

The senator grabbed them out of his hands and tossed them to the ground, "How could you do this to me? Do you know how embarrassing this is? My own son making such scurrilous trash!

"I have spent the last couple of weeks trying to withdraw arts funding for artists who concoct this sort of garbage, but our proposal was rejected by a 264 to 153 vote. Our money should not be usurped by such obscene . . ."

"Now just hold it a second will you. Damn it, I knew that I had shown these to you. This is art," Joe Jr. said picking up his sketchings. "This is an expression of me, of my feelings. Do you mean to tell me that you and your half-baked, pompous cronies were actually trying to make artwork like mine illegal?"

"No, we just wanted to withdraw its federal funding. The public does not want to see . . ."

"Who are you to say what the public does or does not want to see? If I remember correctly, it was you guys who were trying to ban the books that I came home with for Christmas break . . . and for that matter, the records I had too."

The senator just shook his head, silently clenching his fists, "Is this the way we brought you up? Your mother and I gave you such a strong moral upbringing . . ."

"You just don't get it do you? For someone who is supposed to be a representative of the people, you should at least know what rights you should be defending. Doesn't the First Amendment come to mind when you start trying to prohibit the freedom of expression?"

"Don't start with that, I've heard enough of this 'First Amendment' garbage. It's not decent, nor is it right . . ."

"Forget about lunch Dad, just forget about it," Joe Jr. grunted. He shoved his tattered sketches back into his attache and started for the door.

"Oh wait, I brought something that I thought you might like," Joe Jr. said with a smile.

He pulled a partially charred flag out of his back pocket and tossed it to the senator saying, "Joey Johnson, my hero."

I'll procrastinate tomorrow

Although it has been said that money is "the root of all evil," I have realized that there is another, more powerful "evil" that plagues college students. The evil I have discovered can be blamed for every late paper, missed deadline and all-night cram session on campus. It is procrastination.

E. Douglas Banks

According to Webster's dictionary, procrastination is "delaying or putting off until another day."

For example, you have a four page paper due in two weeks. Do you give any thought to that paper?

Probably not. It is on your mind, but there are many more important things (such as playing wiffle ball or visiting friends) that must be done first. You are forced to push it to the back of your mind until two days before it is due.

I call this priority procrastination, which means that you have every intention of doing it, but not right now.

There is another popular variety from which we have all suffered. Its name is party procrastination. This occurs during a weekend, when there is a test on Monday and you have the entire weekend to study for it. You go out for a few drinks Friday, which puts studying off until Saturday.

Sunday morning you are either hungover or so tired that you don't get up until 2 o'clock. Sure enough, procrastination strikes again.

The word itself sounds menacing. Pro-cras-ti-na-tion. This sinister affliction affected me terribly over the summer.

I was having problems with my car stereo for weeks before I decided to do something about it. I brought my stereo to the store where I purchased it, and after an afternoon of explaining my presence and waiting in lines, a service man took it out to fix it.

When I got it home, it began the same ritual of clicks and knocks that were supposedly fixed. I vowed and swore that I would make an appointment to have it fixed again.

Weeks went by. I kept putting it off, until weeks turned into months.

Now, three months later, the warranty has expired and I am the proud owner of a faulty car stereo.

However, I cannot blame myself — procrastination made me do it.

There are ways to avoid procrastination. For instance, you can go to the library every night with your books and sit at a table full of ambitious bookworms. What can you do at the library besides study?

Or, if you have friends in the same class, have a study session. You can make popcorn, play the radio at a low volume, and discuss the topic to be studied.

Never attempt to lock the door and study in the room. There are too many distractions. You'll soon be looking out the window, fiddling with the stereo, or talking on the telephone.

If it's procrastination you're avoiding, go with an ambitious crowd that will make you follow through with your plans.

I know what everyone's probably thinking. As soon as you try to get the ambition to achieve something, the phone will ring or that new movie you've been dying to see will be playing at the theater.

Well, even if you are the kind of person that writes down a list of pipe dreams and goals for the semester, but accomplishes none of them, don't feel bad because you are not alone.

Everywhere someone is avoiding work, dodging a confrontation, or putting off homework of some kind. It is human nature.

So no matter how bad a procrastinator you are, never fear, someone out there is worse. Look at me, I started this editorial in early August.

President has a bad attitude

I support the striking the request of the NYNEX workers' to meet with NYNEX board member, Elizabeth Kennan, President of Mount Holyoke College.

I do, however, question the definition of her being labeled as a feminist.

Why would a "feminist" president refuse to investigate reports about an incident that occurred last spring at Mt. Holyoke.

Students in Mead Hall hired a male stripper who, "took it all off" in a common room of the dormitory where, anyone could have walked in on his performance.

In a similar incident that occurred recently at Lehigh University, where a fraternity hired a female stripper, the fraternity was charged with creating a sexually intimidating, hostile, offensive social and educational environment.

The fraternity was then barred from campus for a period a four years.

It would seem that President Kennan's attitudes about sexism both in the workplace and on her own campus leave much to be desired.

Would you set the American flag aflame to toast your marshmallows? How about use it to patch your Levis? How about using it for a doormat? Do you feel that this type of expression is within your Constitutional rights?

Or does the desecration — in any shape or form — of the American flag infuriate you? Do you feel that the flag is a sacred symbol that represents everything that the United States of America stands for?

Death of police cadet still remembered

AGAWAM, Mass. (AP) — A year ago, cadet Timothy Shepard set off for his first day at the police academy, promising his wife of a few months he'd be home for supper to tell her all about the rigors of training.

But Shepard never cam home. He collapsed that afternoon while running laps around a field at the Agawam academy and died six weeks later of complications related to heatstroke. More than a dozen of Shepard's classmates were hospitalized for treatment of exhaustion and dehydration.

In the year since, many of the officials involved in police training at the academy have been replaced and stress training has been banned. And Holly Shepard has taken on the role of determined crusader, battling to see criminal charges brought in the case.

"It wasn't an act of God that my husband is dead," Mrs. Shepard said in a telephone interview from her Pittsfield home. "Timmy knew about stress training. We were going to laugh about it Sept. 19 in the evening. He didn't think they were going to hurt him. He didn't think he was going to be killed."

North Adams Mayor John Barrett, one of the first to demand an explanation when cadets fell ill Sept. 19, said he, too, doesn't feel enough has been done in the past year.

"I still have a lot of anger and bitterness left," said the mayor, who believes investigations focused too much on troopers and not enough on top state officials.

"They hoped it would just go away, well it didn't go away. I think the only way that it could have been straightened out was to clean house," Barrett said.

Taking on the state is not a role that Mrs. Shepard, the daughter of a retired police officer, ever envisioned. And it is far from the busy life she had planned of combining the life of a new mother with working at a family business while Shepard got his start in law enforcement.

"We had it all worked out," she said.

"I could go on for hours about how my life has changed," said Mrs. Shepard. "I think right now I'm angrier and more hurt than I ever have been in my life or than I ever thought I could be."

An inquest conducted by Springfield district Judge Irving Goldblatt found probable cause to seek charges of involuntary manslaughter against Gary F. Egan, former executive director of the Criminal Justice Training Council, Earl Harrington, former director of the academy, and State police Trooper Blake Gilmore, who served as commandant of the academy.

The inquest report said cadets performed scores of push-ups for minor infractions and gulped water from restroom faucets because they were afraid to incur the wrath of instructors by spending too much time at a cooler.

Attorney General James Shannon declined to prosecute, saying the actions of training officers did not meet the standards for involuntary manslaughter.

Mrs. Shepard, who gave birth in March to the son she was carrying when her husband collapsed, hopes to prove Shannon wrong through an independent counsel then Sen. Peter Webber, a Pittsfield Republican, has requested in legislation filed this session.

Attorneys representing state troopers did not return telephone calls to the Associated Press Monday.

Meanwhile, Egan, who resigned in November, has been indicted, along with a business lobbyist and former state representative, by a Suffolk County grand jury on larceny charges stemming from the council's financial operations.

Webber also has filed bills requesting that the state pay all the cadets' medical expenses not covered by insurance and that Mrs. Shepard be awarded a full pension, rather then the two-thirds amount she gets now. Both bills are pending. Shepard underwent a liver transplant before his death Nov.2 and his medical bills of about $500,000 remain unpaid.

any major proposal on long-range arms.

He acknowledged rumors that Schevardnadze would bring a new arms proposal to the United States during meetings later this week, but said, " I don't know what he's going to bring. We haven't had that confirmed."

He added: "I feel under no rush on the subject. I think our handling of the Soviet account is pretty good... I think the chief point is does the Soviet Union understand that we want to see their Peristroka succeed and see them move forward with more liberties and I think they do understand that and so I don't think there's any chance of a disconnect there."

"These are not easy problems," Bush said, mentioning verification issues as among the thorniest ot a so-called START pact limiting long-range ballistic missiles. At the same time, he said, "don't see any insurmountable stumbling blocks there." He said he was in no hurry to meet personally with Mikhail Gorbachev.

"We do want to move ahead on START," Bush said. "As you know we came in, did a review, completed the review, and we will be working inside our own administration to have the proposal that I think will capture the imagination of the Soviet Union.

Tibetan dance ritual

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

There will be a "whole lot of shakin' goin' on" September 21 at 8 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College. However, "This ain't no disco/This ain't no foolin' around."

The Namgyal Monks, members of His Holiness the Dalai Lama's personal monastery from Tibet, will perform Dances From the Diamond Realm, which is a group of theatrical, spiritual, and ultimately fascinating Tibetan ritual dances, the roots of which date back to the 8th century.

Draped in elaborate robes, masks and headresses, and playing a variety of instruments including cymbals, bells, trumpets and hand drums, the crusading monks will present a varied program of "Cham", or spirtual dances.

For instance, in "Dance of the Cemetary Lords," two dancers dressed as skeletons athletically display the fearless qualities of the "protectors of truth", or those who have passed "beyond ego." The dance is usually performed at the end of the year during a seven day festival, when the negative forces accumulated during the year are purified.

In the 1950's, when China invaded Tibet, the marauding army decimated about 8,000 monasteries, ransacked libraries, murdered monks and over a million people, and "drove what remained of one of the world's most complex and esoteric systems of thought into near permanent diaspora."

Today, the Chinese allow approximately 250 monks to remain in Tibet, mainly as tourist attractions. However, Buddhism, their religion, is virtually outlawed.

General admission for the presentation is $13. Tickets are available in Northampton at Beyond Words Bookshop in Thorne's Marketplace. Proceeds from the performance will benefit the Namgyal Monastery (the Dalai Lama's residence) in Dharamsala, India, where there is a traditional Tibetan curriculum of arts and science of living.

Experience the arts instead of the bars

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

When I sit and watch a perfectly brilliant folk trio like Devonsquare perform to a near empty house, I can't help but get pissed off. Then I hear people always complain that there's nothing to do around here except go to the movies and drink, and I just want to smack these people upside the head.

The fact of the matter is, the Pioneer Valley has so much to offer that the only complaint people should have is that there's too much to do and not enough time to do it all.

But we're afraid to try anything new. We don't want to see a band that isn't played on our favorite pop station, or see a play or a dance that we've never seen before.

No, instead, we'd rather take our money and literally piss it away on gallons of alcohol. Don't get me wrong, I also have a tendency to go on drinking sprees, but damn, that gets boring and repetitive after a while. Especially when for less than the cost of a case of beer, you can go to a good concert, have a great time, and wake up the next morning with a clear head.

"I don't have the money," is the excuse most people give. The truth is, shows around here cost about half as much as seeing the same acts in Boston, or even Springfield. Tickets for the Call at Pearl Street were $7 less than tickets for their Boston show, yet the Pearl Street turnout was only about a third as large as the Boston one.

ARTS ATTACK

People who paid $30 to see Crosby, Stills and Nash from a balcony many miles away from the stage, could have used that money to see four excellent folk shows at the Amherst College Sundays at Eight series, and sat literally feet from the stage.

There's nothing quite like the feeling of seeing an act in a close, intimate setting, where you can see the performer's subtle gestures and feel the energy up close. Once you see a few club shows, you'll never want to go to an arena show again.

But we'll keep going to arena shows because we know the acts and we know the music. We have to make sure a group gains mass acceptance before we happily lay out $25 to see them. But if the group is a virtual unknown, $5 is too much, even though the group may be just as, and in many cases more, talented than the popular group.

A group does not have to be popular to be good. Usually if a group is not popular, it's because they offer something that's a little different, or are just starting out, or both. Wouldn't you love to say to someone who just shelled out $25 to see 10,000 Maniacs that you saw them for less than half that price at the Iron Horse three years ago?

For those of you under 21, there are still no excuses. Katina's and the Iron Horse are both eighteen and over clubs, and Pearl Street often has eighteen plus shows as well, including last weekend's fabulous Andrew Tosh show.

And let's not forget all the University has to offer right on campus. The University Players and Dancers often put on professional dance, music, and acting shows that cost next to nothing for students. It's a good way to have some fun and get some culture, and you'll remember it the next morning.

In the 1970s, Dick Gregory was an activist. He wanted to make you change.

In the 1980s, Dick Gregory was a nutritionist. He wanted to make you thin.

Heading into the 1990s, Dick Gregory has assumed the role of drug-buster. Currently on a three-month-old fast, Gregory, 56, is in Shreveport, La., where he is running the "drug-free-zone capital of the world."

Collegian: Do you still perform as a comedian?

Gregory: Not in night clubs. I decided in '73 that any place that sold alcohol, I wouldn't perform in.

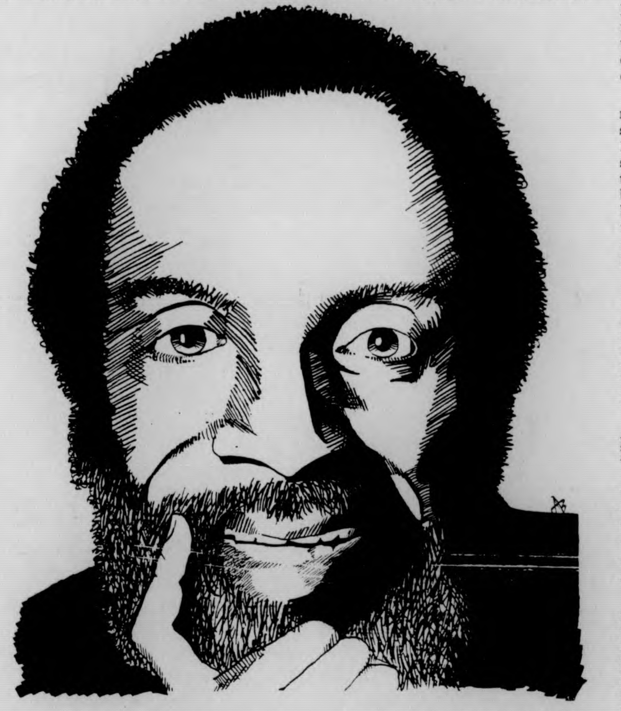
Collegian: What can the "Just Say No" people learn from your most recent cause — cleaning up a drug haven in Shreveport?

Gregory: That to clean up drugs has to be more than a slogan. It has to be a physical action. "Just Say No" has made America aware that there is a drug problem. But the slogan has become cute. It doesn't mean anything, because "Just Say No" doesn't bother anybody. It doesn't bother the pusher, the user or the little child — it doesn't mean anything to them. So what we did here is come out and take physical action.

The "Just Say No" people have to learn to come out and organize, and that doesn't mean just come out by yourself, it means organize with the church. With the church — if the church comes out on the street corners — we could do to the whole drug problem in America what the church in Poland did nine years ago to communism. What did it do? It didn't say to the communists in Poland, "You have a right to exist." It said, "Get off my back!" And in the process of getting them off their back, they (the communists) damn near got destroyed. so if the church comes out en masse and says, "Get off my back!" then we can break this, because the biggest problem with drugs isn't the drugs, it's fear.

We're tampering with a trillion-dollar industry that's got carte blanche. They're not scared of the police. They've got the best lawyers and they've got the biggest guns. But what they're finding out in Shreveport is, that doesn't mean anything when you're dealing with people who don't fear dying. Nobody wants to die, but the reason America has such a great Army is that somewhere in that training, the people learned not to mind dying. And when you've got people who are dedicated, with a belief, and are willing to lay their lives down, the opposite side has hell on their hands.

What we have here are the real soldiers. The Marines should come and watch us when we march every night. Grandmothers, grandfathers, husbands, wives, children, people with arthritis, people who can't hardly walk — they're walking. There is an inspiration. . . This is people power. Standing on the corners, next to the dope pushers, we say "You have a right to push dope. I have a right to stand on this corner." What it did was scare the people who bought the dope — who no longer wanted to be there. That's how you dry it up.



Collegian art by Andre Busi

Collegian: Are you going to attempt to clean up other areas beset by drugs?

Gregory: What's happening is, other cities are coming here. Right here, it's more effective to have our headquarters, because if we went on the road, we could only go to one city at a time. But 35 cities can come here on the same date. We're using this as the drug-free-zone capital of the world. And people are coming here and asking, "How did you do it?"

Collegian: Jesse Jackson unsuccessfully ran for president. Still, Blacks are in many levels of government. But some say that beneath the surface things have not changed all that much, that America is still divided and segregated. Do you agree?

Gregory: No, not at all. Before the '60s movement, 99.9 percent of all Blacks were scared of the Ku Klux Klan. You can't find 1 percent of Black folks today who are scared of the Ku Klux Klan. The reason is, the Ku Klux Klan was never strong because of strength. They were strong because of fear. When we stopped fearing them, they had no strength. They were strong because of fear. When we stopped fearing them, they had no strength.

Back then we had to go to separate lunch rooms. During World War II, when the American soldiers were bringing the German prisoners back to the POW camps, that German prisoner was allowed to go into a White restaurant and sit down and eat. The Black American that was guarding him was not permitted in.

Progress? This country has made more progress in 20 years than it made in the history of the planet in race relations.

Any problems we have now are our fault. We woke up in the '60s. The reason why we look like we have problems now is because Black folks are not putting their money where their hearts are. That is, they would like to see an America where we can all have jobs.

Black folks handled last year $388 billion in cash. If we were a separate nation, we'd be the fifth or sixth most economically powerful nation on the planet. We're a better customer with America than all of Europe and all of Japan. If we change our priorities, we can let America know that if you're not careful, you may not have my account next year, unless things change some more.

In two weeks, Dick Gregory discusses his Bahamian diet, his 1968 run for the presidency and his days as an activist, fasting for issues.

Chen said because the number of Americans who smoke decreased by almost 14 percent between 1964 and 1986, tobacco companies now market their products overseas, including Asia.

"The cigarette companies are looking for countries to make up for the loss of smokers in America," Chen said.

Chen also said the US government urged tobacco companies to open markets in Japan and other Asian countries because the trade deficit in those countries adversely affected the US economy.

"The Reagan administration was looking for any market to open [in the Asian nations]," Chen said. "They singled out the cigarette market because the tobacco companies are strong in Washington."

Chen said when American companies were not successful in overseas markets, the US government cited Section 301 of the 1974 Trade Act to pressure the countries to allow US companies to sell there.

Under Section 301, if a country refuses to open a market to any American-made product, the American trade representative in that nation may retaliate by banning some of their exports from the US.

The government has used the rule successfully for the companies, Chen said, citing the opening of tobacco markets in Japan, Taiwan and South Korea in 1986, 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Currently, the Bush administration is also trying to open Thailand to tobacco exports, according to Chen.

Chen said cigarette companies don't use safeguards with cigarettes sold overseas as in the United States, such as a warning label on the side of the box.

He also said the tar and nicotine levels are higher in exported cigarettes than in domestically sold ones, thus further increasing the risk of cancer.

Chen testified that trade is not an issue with tobacco sales, but human rights are.

"If health is seen as a human right of all people, then a nation's right to protect its people should not be labeled an unfair practice," he said.

He also said the United States should not pressure other countries to advertise tobacco on television when cigarette ads have been banned from American television since the 1970s.

Double Live
Blast First

In this year of our Lord, God, in the form of a big Filipino guy with reefer (or possibly a big New Zealander with a keg of beer), has given us, his humble (and often less than greatful) servants, two of the most monstrous records ever—the Red Hot Chilli Peppers' Mother's Milk, and the Butthole Surfers' Double Live. These bands have realized that Jimi Hendrix was the end-all/be-all of guitarists, and have taken his influence to record two of the heaviest, most psychedelic records since Axis: Bold as Love.

RECORD REVIEW

The Red Hot Chili Peppers dedicate their new album to their former guitarist Hillel Slovak, who died two years ago of a drug overdose. Knowing they had something to prove, they recruited a hot new guitarist, 18-year-old John Frusciante, and drummer Chad Smith, and put out a record that abounds with new found power and confidence.

The Chili Peppers keep with their riotous fun attitude with songs like "Good Time Boys," "Subway to Venus" and "Magic Johnson". However, they also tackle more serious subjects with "Knock Me Down" and "Taste the Pain".

'Knock Me Down" is the song most obviously dedicated to Slovak, whose death caused the band to rethink their lifestyles, "If you see me getting mighty/If you see me getting high/Knock me down/I'm not bigger than life."

The best songs on the record, as on all the Chili Peppers'albums, are the songs about sex. "Stone Cold Bush" is a hard rocking scorcher that features "vocals" by teen porn queen Traci Lords, during the guitar solo. "Sexy Mexican Maid" is "Special Secret Song Inside" revisited, and is just as sultry and dirty in both lyrics and rhythm. Mother's Milk is the best album to date from the Red Hot Chili Peppers, LA's heaviest funkin' band.

The Butthole Surfers on the other hand, have already proven themselves as kings of the psychedelic underground. Their new album, Double Live, reaffirms that they are not only one of the best psychedelic bands on record, but live as well.

The record starts off with the straightforward "Too Partner", and then drifts into "Psychedelic Jam", a nine minute mind blast of guitar jamming over a thundering backbeat, provided by the Surfers two stand up drummers. The album contains 6 or 7 songs from Hairway to Steven (which, for the first time, have song titles), a bunch of other Surfers classics, a cover of R.E.M.'s "The One I Love", and a barrage of white noise feedback, appropriately titled "Lou Reed".

In "John E. Smoke," Gibby Haynes sings about "a little crippled midget lesbian boy who stood ten feet tall with a knife." In "Rocky" he proclaims "all of my friends baby /they say I'm insane," only to follow this a few verses later with "all of my friends/they're going insane." During the intro to "Sweetloaf," Giddy mocks Jim Morrison's Oedipal speech, by changing it into a twisted pornographic tale, and ending it screaming "Satan, Satan, Satan" as the band kicks in.

The best part about the record is that it demonstrates that the Butthole Surfers are a great live band, in addition to being a great studio band. They can hold their own against any band when they play straight, and when they add their special blend of Butthole Surfers effects, only God and Gibby know where they are taking you.

As the eighties come to an end, and most independent bands sign with major labels and soften their sound to get airplay on AOR stations, it's great to hear two of the best bands around, rocking heavier and more psychedelic than ever.

Devonsquare the latest Sunday night bargain

By KAREN PLACZEK

Collegian Correspondent

Devonsquare
Amherst College
Sunday, Sept. 17

Why pay $40 for Crosby, Stills and Nash tickets, have to cope with the hassles of parking, crowd control, and the effects miscellaneous hallucinogenic drugs are having on the people around you, when for $7, you can experience a group like Atlantic Recording artists Devonsquare, down the road at Amherst College? While CS&N was a great show, as far as the law of averages goes, for the money and the effort involved, this trio from Maine has the edge.

REVIEW

An essentially acoustic guitar performance supplemented with the talent of Alana McDonald's hauntingly emotional violin solos, as well as the trio's beautiful harmonies, the group entertained a variety of themes from politics, to religion and romance, to cannibalism (yes, cannibalism). They even played a song about Elvis.

Having sung together for twelve years, Devonsquare displayed an informal and playful familiarity. Herb Ludwig (vocals) amused the audience between songs with his jokes, while Tom Dean (guitar) and McDonald laughed both with, as well as at, the singer.

Their unique brand of humor was further recognized in a "sick song", entitled "Love is a Virus", complete with the incorporation of sniffles and sneezes. Ludwig also spoke of their occasional difficulty arriving at themes for their songs which led them to using the Donner party, famed for eating each other for survival in the mountains of California, as song writing material.

Aside from the witticism encountered throughout the show, their attention to more pressing issues was evident in songs like "They Let the Clowns Lead the Band", aimed at ridiculing teenage evangelists, as well as others in positions of power.

Sung with a distinctive, native rhythm, "Black Africa" addresses the problem of apartheid in "white Africa."

In addition, holding up a black velvet painting of Elvis, the likes of which can be found on street corners, tag sales and flea markets nationwide, Ludwig introduced their next song appropriately entitled "Velvet Elvis". Also performed by Aztec Two Step, "Velvet Elvis"attacks the commercialization of the King, accusing it of having reduced a gifted performer to not much more than a cheesy pool hall adornment.

Devonsquare closed their show with "Under the Freeze" directed at the problem of chemicals polluting our air supply, pointing out the disturbing reality that "what goes up must come down".

So next time you're standing in a three hour line at Ticketron, or have heard enough Paula Abdul or Bobby Brown for the week, keep in mind the Sunday night folk series at the Front Room of the Amherst College Campus Center. If all the shows offer the same quality of talent as shown by Devonsquare, it's well worth the walk over.

BC's Barros signs long term contract with Sonics

Big East star bound to camp with a reportedly multimillion-dollar deal

SEATTLE(AP)—Dana Barros, the Big East scoring champion for the past two years at Boston College, has signed a long term contract with the Seattle Supersonics, the NBA club announced Monday.

The four-year contract has an option for a fifth year. The Sonics did not disclose terms terms of the contract but it reportedly was a multimillion-dollar deal.

Barros will wear No. 11 for the Sonics. He will be on hand when the Sonics open their training camp at Northwest College in Kirkland Oct. 6.

The 5-foot-11 Barros was the first of Seattle's two first-round picks and the 16th overall in the NBA draft last June 27.

Barros started all of Boston Colleges 119 games during his four years there and averaged 19.7 points per game. He averaged 23.3 as a senior when he scored 692 points to increase his career total to 2,342, the second most by any Big East player.

He sank 112 three-point field goals as a senior and ended his career with a three-point streak of 70 games, the second longest in NCAA history.

"Somehow I felt that this may be the day that Jerome Bledsoe showed why we moved him to tailback," Reid said. "He's an awesome football player. He works hard."

"I've been begging him to move me to offense for two years," Bledsoe said. He can only be thankful the pleas didn't fall on deaf ears this season."

"We didn;t have any major runs last year," Reid said. "We felt that Roger [Baldacci] could throw and could run the option. But we needed one more threat."

And Bledsoe has been a threat to break the "major run" that Reid seeks every time his hands touch the ball. On his touchdown run, the first of two he had on the day, he slipped through the left side of the line and then turned on the jets, literally outrunning the pack. On several other plays, Bledsoe used his speed to turn the corner and pick up extra yardage.

"Bledsoe's an awfully good back," said Lehigh coach Hank Small. "We missed tackles, but with the fakes they did he was making people miss. He made us look bad."

But Saturday, Jerome Bledsoe looked oh, so good.

And while we're on the subject . . .: Further supporting the Bledsoe move, Caparotti had his second straight outstanding game with 12 tackles and an over-the-shoulder interception in the end zone. For his work, Caparotti was named Yankee Conference rookie-of-the-week.

Just imagine how tough life was before calculators: The official NCAA statistics from Lehigh University had Baldacci completing 17 of 29 passes for 199 yards and three touchdowns. But some quick homework by Springfield Union-News sportswriter Larry Silber showed that Baldacci actually only threw 24 passes. Baldacci is ranked second in the conference in passing efficiency, behind only Buck.

Party poopers: Lehigh wasn't the only team in the Steel Belt that was celebrating on Saturday. About 20 miles up the road in Easton, Pa., Lafayette College was also playing its 1,000th game. And it was also a Massachusetts school, Holy Cross, which ruined the fun with a 23-21 comeback win.

Update from the local M*A*S*H unit: It was a relatively quiet day for the UMass trainers. Fullback David Mitchell played only the first half after suffering a bruised thigh.

"I got hurt on the squib kick and bruised my thigh. It's not that bad, I just can't sprint on it," Mitchell said.

Taking Mitchell's place was junior Jim Pastorick, who carried for 52 yards in Mitchell's absence.

"I could have played if I had to, but Jim did a great job," Mitchell said.

Meanwhile, defensive tackle Steve Brothers is still bothered by a shoulder problem and has been listed as doubtful for Saturday's Yankee Conference opener at Maine.

Around the Yan Con: Maine and Delaware are each in the Top 10 in this week's Division I-AA poll after impressive wins this weekend. The Black Bears are ranked ninth after smothering Villanova, 47-14, while Delaware is on their heels at 10th following a 21-12 win at Rhode Island. UMass, despite a 1-0-1 start and a preseason rank of 15th, didn't even get one vote.

Connecticut took a brief step up to Division I-A against recently-reinstated Southern Methodist. But coach Forrest Gregg's rebuilt Mustangs won it on the last play, 31-30. Richmond was stuffed by James Madison, 31-0 and Boston University fell to West Chester, 24-19. New Hampshire had the week off.

Women's tennis open season

By C.J. ABATI

Saturday's season-opening match for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team against the University of Rhode Island was rained out and will likely be replayed sometime in late October.

"It was a match that we were really looking forward to. I certainly hope we can make it up," UMass coach Edwin Gentzler said.

Because of the rainout, the team opens its season today at 1 p.m. against Providence College at the Upper Boyden Courts.

"It will probably be a very good match, possibly a great one," Gentzler said. "This is our only match in September. I hope it's a fun day so we can come back strong in October."

The Minutewomen battled Providence twice last year, but came up short both times. In the first meeting they were disposed of rather easily, losing all nine matches. UMass faired a little better the second time around, winning two while dropping six.

"We went from a team that was whitewashed, to coming close to victory. They pulled out a couple of points in a really tough match," Gentzler said. "If we got a few breaks, it could have gone the other way.

"I expect our lineup and their lineup to be quite similar this year. We have two freshmen playing in the top six spots, which makes us stronger," Gentzler said. "I am sure Providence has recruited some quality players themselves.

"This match should be a good test for the upcoming season. We have gotten stronger over the years," Gentzler said. "Our goal is to go out there and beat them. Providence is one of the top tennis programs on the East coast. I'm not sure we're ready yet."

Despite Gentzler's comments, he still feels that his team can do well. "If we hang tough, and play up to our capabilities, we'll do very well."

medicine, as they helped dropped them from their lofty spot in the national poll.

The slick playing conditions literally had a hand in Wisconsin's first and only goal of the afternoon. Shelley Gehrke's kick toward the net was deflected in off keeper Skye Eddy, who could only get one hand on the ball after slipping in the muck.

In the second half, the playing surface literally tilted in favor of UMass, as the rains had worn the field down to the point where the Reds had an advantage.

"We were attacking downhill and they had to defend," said Rudy. "When you're playing in the mud, a little slope is a big slope."

Freshman Kim Eynard didn't disappoint her local hometown fans as she scored the first UMass goal of the game. Freshman defender Holly Hellmuth's free kick was over to Kater, but Eynard was there at the back side of the play to finish it off.

The game-winner was scored by Hellmuth off a nifty misdirection play. Kater, who is always marked by at least two defenders because of her offensive skills, darted toward the near post, drawing attention from Hellmuth, who was at the right place to knock in the corner to complete the weekend sweep.

Who said there's no consolation for finishing second?

tional Invitational at Brown this Friday, Saturday and Sunday . . . Yarworth is hoping goalie Carl Johnson will be available to share time with Larson this weekend. He has been out with a thumb injury.

Coming into the season Yarworth was concerned about the sometimes lack of team play by UMass. His fears, at least for the moment, have been put to rest. "This past weekend we played together as a team," he said. "I was very happy with the togetherness we showed."

Minutewomen travel to the Eagles' nest

Captain Nancy Sullivan and the rest of the UMass volleyball squad travel to Boston College tonight for a date with the Eagles.

UMass looks for first win in rebuilding year

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts volleyball team travels to Boston College at Chestnut Hill today, they will be taking on their toughest foe yet. At the same time, however, they will be better prepared then they have been in this still very young season.

UMass is going through a rebuilding season and with rebuilding in any sport the important ingredient is not necessarily winning, but more importantly improving.

"We need to take our play up a few notches each game." said head coach Carol Ford.

Although the Minutewomen have not won either of their matches (Hartford and Fairfield) this season, they have played progressively better in each of their games. In the last match against Fairfield, UMass outscored its opponent in the last three games by a score of 42-36.

One of the major weapons for UMass has been junior captain Nancy Sullivan. In the match against Fairfield, Sullivan had 14 kills and only 3 errors. She also had 2 aces and a team leading 20 digs. Also contributing in the UMass attack was senior Juliet Santiago who had 6 kills, and freshman Sharon Panoff who had 9 kills.

Kelly Ramsey has been playing the role of unsung hero for this team. In her last match she had 5 service aces and she set up a number of the UMass kills. Ramsey will be a key factor in the development of the character of the team.

"Her numbers are not going to show what she's doing.' said Ford, "She's a great leader." The Minutewomen will also have a stronger bench with the likes of freshman Rachel Bredemier and freshman Sue Richardson healthy again, it will be the closest the team has been to fielding the squad at full strength.

In many ways this Boston College team is a mirror image of the team that UMass will send to the floor tonight. The Eagles are also a very young team with the breakdown at one graduate student (using her fifth year of eligibilty), one senior, two juniors, five sophmores,and three freshmen.

The senior is outside hitter and captain Terri Shanahan. Shanahan leads B.C. in aces, kills and digs. Shanahan is vying for her third consecutive team MVP. Jennifer Smith is the second tier in the Boston College attack. Smith, a junior middle hitter, leads the team in blocks and is second in kills and can be trouble from anywhere on the court.

B.C. will come into the game with a 2-5 record, having beaten the likes of Central Connecticut and Seton Hall. Earlier in the season they lost to highly rated Hofstra who can be more then a match for any team in the nation according to B.C. head coach Gary Gildea.

"I am excited about playing UMass." said Gildea, "I know UMass is also a young team and I know Carol (coach Ford) puts together a good squad."

B.C. is coming off of a 6-18 season and is in the midst of rebuilding.

"It wasn't supposed to be that way.", Gildea said. "We've been working into a groove and we always seem to have a good match with UMass. It will be exciting."

For UMass to match up with the Eagles they must get the bugs out. "We are going to have to play closer to our system in order to win." Ford said, "And that means execute. We will have to play well Tuesday (today)."

This will be the second stop in a four date road trip that the Minutewomen are currently in the middle of.

This match will also be a good tune-up for UMass as they will go to the Rhode Island Tournament this weekend and will play the likes of R.I., Providence and Brown. "It will be tough.", said Ford, "Those are all top notch teams."

Women's soccer sweeps crucial series

UMass beats Cornell, Wisconsin over weekend

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

The eleventh-ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer played well this weekend (beating Cornell and Wisconsin), won both its games, and finished second. Finished second, you say?

The Reds (3-2) finished as bridesmaids in the Cornell Invitational, despite their perfect 2-0 record. Colorado College was awarded first place by virtue of scoring more goals. Wisconsin and Cornell were both bait for UMass and Colorado, as they were handed two losses each.

Coach Jim Rudy said of the first game, a 2-0 shutout, "It was a very even game statistically. We had one more shot and save than they did and we were even on the corners."

The young UMass team showed they were able to learn from some of their mistakes from last year. One of last year's weaknesses, converting off restarts, was a bright spot this weekend, as three of the four goals were off a penalty kick, a free kick, and a corner kick.

Things began to roll Saturday against Cornell as Sue Gaudette had been taken down in the penalty box and April Kater promptly converted the penalty kick, placing the ball in an open corner.

The offense was then a victim again of the post, as Kater and Gaudette each hit the bar. Rudy, keeping track of his statistics, points out that that was the sixth post in five games for his Reds.

Late in the first half, Rudy inserted Michele Woodside into the game and she ended up on the stat sheet with an assist on a goal scored by Sue Gaudette.

Kater, playing the point guard with the ball in the midfield, passed the ball to Woodside, running the right flank. Woodside, in turn, fed the ball to Gaudette cutting toward the net. Gaudette took the centering pass and beat the keeper for the final UMass score.

Things certainly didn't get any easier for the Minutewomen the next day in a Top 20 fight, as they had to go up against a formidable foe in fourth-ranked Wisconsin.

The Lady Badgers had written themselves in the history books, defeating the Reds 2-1 in last year's postseason to keep UMass out of the Final Four for the first time in six years.

Breaking a Final Four tradition that is so strong has its price, and UMass gladly repaid Wisconsin back, edging them 2-1.

The Reds were able to give the Lady Badgers (4-2) a little bit of their own

Bledsoe completes his end of the bargain

Football notebook

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Last week Don Caparotti, this week Jerome Bledsoe. University of Massachusetts football coach Jim Reid is looking more like a genius every game.

During preseason, Reid surprised a few people by shifting Bledsoe, an All-New England selection at cornerback last season, to tailback. Caparotti, a redshirt sophomore, took over Bledsoe's cornerback spot and last week against James Madison had five tackles and three key pass break-ups.

This week, in helping to beat Lehigh University, 42-23 in Bethlehem, Pa., it was Bledsoe's turn to justify the move.

"Isn't he cute?" Reid said as he planted a kiss on Bledsoe's forehead during the postgame press conference. Reid had plenty of reason to be happy with Bledsoe's performance.

The junior from Burlington Township, N.J. merely carried the ball 19 times for 209 yards, the most rushing yards in a game for UMass since Garry Pearson set the team record with 288 in 1982. His 85-yard touchdown run in the first quarter, which tied the game at 7-7, was also the longest run from scrimmage in memory.

All this led to Bledsoe being named the ECAC offensive player-of-the-week. Were it not for another inhuman effort by Maine quarterback Mike Buck, he probably could have tossed in Yankee Conference honors as well.

Water polo splashes to 3rd at Easterns

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts water polo team won two out of three games this past weekend to take third place in the Eastern Varsity Tournament at Harvard University.

The Minutemen defeated 15th-ranked Iona and Harvard by identical 9-8 scores and lost to 13th-ranked Brown, 11-7.

"I'm very pleased with how we played," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth. "We more than accomplished our goals this weekend."

Against Iona, Jon Miller, Alex Yalensky and Brian McIver scored two goals each to give UMass its first win of the season. Yarworth cited goalie Todd Larson as playing a big role in the victory.

"Larson had a great game in net," Yarworth said. "I was very pleased with him."

The excitement of the first game probably played a part in UMass' second game, a lackluster defeat against Brown. Yarworth felt that the lack of emotion and vigor were what held back the Minutemen.

"We came out flat," he said. "We were not ready to play at all."

UMass bounced back against Harvard in their next game, coming home with the 'W' and the third place finish for the weekend. The Minutemen outscored Harvard 6-5 in the final period to get the win.

McIver was the star in this one as he was a defensive stalwart from start to finish. "he had about six or seven steals," Yarworth said. "He created all sorts of trouble in the water."

With McIver and Larson (12 saves — "he was unbelievable," said Yarworth) taking care of the defensive chores, Miller, Mike Melanson and G.T. Ladd handled the bulk of the offensive load as each threw in two goals.

More cuts possible for UMass

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Low state revenues over the past two months have prompted the state to request its agencies, including the University of Massachusetts, to prepare for a possible five percent budget cut, Chancellor Joseph Duffey said yesterday.

Duffey said he received a copy of a letter sent by State Secretary of Administration and Finance Edward Lasham this week asking state agencies to submit a plan in case the cutback becomes reality.

The request is based upon continued lower revenues than projected in August and September, Duffey said.

"It's not a decision or order to reduce," he said. "It's talking of looking at plans [for a possible reduction]."

Duffey refused to comment on the details of the University's plan. He said the University's response is being formulated and will be made public at the Faculty Senate meeting tomorrow.

"I've got a strategy in my mind," he said. "At the moment, I think this campus and higher education has been cut too much."

In July, the University sustained an additional $8.1 million budget cut, resulting in the further attrition of faculty and staff, a planned enrollment reduction of some 900 students, and the elimination of near-

Chinese 'rock' for democracy

BOSTON — Dissident Chinese student leaders mixed politics and rock 'n roll at a Boston recording studio, taping three songs they hope will climb to the top of the democracy charts.

"They were pretty good singers," said Harry King, who is co-producing the tape. "I was shocked. Politicians usually aren't good singers."

The students recorded three songs Sunday. The song titles, translated from Chinese, are "Hold On Until Tomorrow," "Back to the Square," and "For Momma," said King.

The rockers include Wu'er Kaixi, best known as the student who challenged Premier Li Peng before troops stormed Tiananmen Square, Liu Yan, a woman who escaped with Wu'er, and Shen Tong,

PRSU criticizes research

DOD link opposed

By BETH GATELY
and MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Department of Defense-financed research on knowledge based systems (KBS) being conducted at the University of Massachusetts has drawn criticism from members of People for a Socially Responsible University.

Knowledge based systems are a form of artificial intelligence that contains knowledge about a problem in the form of a collection of facts and rules. It can transfer this information to computers that have decision-making capabilities to aid people in problem solving.

PSRU, whose members participated in six separate building takeovers last spring to protest DOD-financed research at UMass, claimed the research now supervised by UMass Civil Engineering Professor Clive Dym, is being conducted specifically to aid U.S. Air Force soldiers in battle.

Jonathan Leavitt, PSRU member, claims the research is a facet of Project Forecast II. According to a 1986 Air Force newsletter, the project is part of an effort initiated in 1985 by Gen. Lawrence Skantze to improve the Air Force's future warfighting capabilities using, in part, KBS systems.

Security: cut in escort service means less help

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

A $15,000 budget cut has forced the University of Massachusetts Department of Public Safety to reduce its escort service from three walking escorts and a car to one van, said Carol Radzik, director of building security.

Radzik said the cuts mean that security will be able to escort only half of the 3,000 students they were able to escort last year.

One dispatcher, who wished to have her name withheld, said, "The sad thing is, it will take a rape or a murder to make people say, 'Hey, where are the escorts?'"

When told there will be an hour wait, some women say they'll walk, the dispatcher said. Others say they'll wait, but then call back and cancel, she added.

"There's usually eight or ten cancellations a night," she said. "That's eight or ten girls walking by themselves."

She said that although the department had originally relied on a patrol car to service the campus, the car is now having its engine replaced, and the department must share a ticketing and towing van.

Security's obligation to relinquish the van for towing causes delays, as does the drivers' shift change at 10:45 p.m., the busiest time for escort calls, she said.

Claire McDonough, a dispatcher, said that students are also part of the problem.

"The van waits for 15 minutes to see if people will show up," she said. "If four people don't call to cancel, there's your hour right there."

Rick Brown, one of the four head supervisors of security, said he agrees that students help add to the delay.

He said that students grow impatient while security tries to coordinate pick-ups to minimize crisscrossing of the campus.

"We finally get the escort service over there, and people have left," he said.

Radzik said that although fewer students are being escorted because of the delays, she is not aware of any attacks this semester.

Jack Luippold, deputy chief of the department of public safety, said he is also not aware of any increase in the number of rapes, attempted rapes, or indecent assault and battery cases reported on campus.

He said that in 1988 at UMass, nine rapes, four attempted rapes, and four cases of assault and battery were reported. Since January, three rapes have been reported.

Although he said he hopes the number of incidents will not increase because of delays, he said he thinks there are "some things going on out there that we're not tapped into."

Luippold stressed that students need to continue to use the escort service to reduce the risks of being attacked.

Radzik said that the only way for the situation to change is to submit written complaints to the department of public safety.

Director upset after UWW $ halved

By PATRICK M. MANSEAU
Collegian Correspondent

The University Without Walls, a program for non-traditional college students, learned last week that nearly half of its budget has been slashed as a result of state budget cutbacks, its director said.

UWW Director Gary Bernhard said state legislators and Gov. Dukakis do not understand that "public higher education is the only opportunity for working adults and other non-traditional students and they are allowing it to die."

Having been level-funded since 1975, UWW is now expected to reduce its $364,000 budget to $190,000 over the next two years, he said. Specific damage from the cuts cannot be assessed until the department is able to complete a spending plan, he said.

Bernhard said students currently enrolled in the program would be able to graduate with "an equal level of quality."

Hungarian border guards accused of charging E. Germans money to leave

From The Associated Press

BUDAPEST, Hungary — Nine hundred border guards have been accused of taking advantage of the East German exodus by charging refugees money to help them flee to the West, state news media said.

The MTI news agency quoted the military prosecutor's office in the western Hungarian town of Gyoer yesterday as saying the guards had, for "significant sums" of money, helped East Germans across the border sometime after Aug. 20.

Five of the guards have been arrested and the other four have been taken off border patrol duty, MIT said.

East Germans vacationing in Communist Hungary began pouring into Austria in May, when Hungary first removed border fortifications on its western boundary to symbolize its liberal political reforms and its desire for closer ties to the West.

The steady flow to West Germany, where East Germans are granted automatic citizenship, turned into a deluge on Sept. 10, when Hungary defied its hard-line Warsaw Pact allies and organized a mass transfer of thousands of East Germans.

Prof: Cutthroat budget killing labor center

But director says loss of money, personnel won't affect current students

By ROB SIMPSON
Collegian Staff

A proposal to cut 29 percent from the fiscal year 1991 budget of the University of Massachusetts Labor Relations and Research Center is unjust, said Harvey Friedman, director of the center and a professor of political science at the University.

"It's an unfair cut which reflects a change established by the administration as to the mission of the University," he said. "We realize that everything is being cut. We're not unwilling to take our fair share [of the cuts]."

The cut would lead to a projected loss of about $86,000 for the center, which received $297,000 for fiscal year 1989.

The center, which will celebrate its 25th anniversary this weekend, is an academic graduate program that offers a master's degree in labor studies.

The center prepares graduate students to work for unions, government agencies and educational institutions, offers service to the labor and general political communities of the Commonwealth, and does basic research in labor issues, Friedman said.

Friedman said the cut would mean the the loss of personnel, decreased financial assistance to students, and the probable loss of the library and the film library. He said, however, that the cuts would not affect students currently at the University, although future students would be affected.

> "It's like giving us the knife and letting us cut our own throat, producing a long and inevitable death"
> –Harvey Friedman

Friedman said the cut also means the eventual disappearance of the center from the university.

"It's like giving us the knife and letting us cut our own throat, producing a long and inevitable death," he said.

Friedman also believes that Provost Richard O'Brien, who administered the cut to the labor center, is using the budget problems to re-program the education and services provided by the University.

"By using [the budget cuts], they change the mission of the university," he said, adding that such a mission should be "as a land grant college, education, research, and service to the community."

O'Brien said programs most important to the functioning of the University were cut the least, while programs not as central to the University have to withstand more severe cuts.

He said the library, for example, is more essential to the survival of the University than the labor center.

O'Brien would not comment on whether the labor center would be recompensed if funding to the University is restored.

PVPC receives grant

$72,000 to improve PVTA bus service

The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission has been awarded a $72,000 grant from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration to improve the service of PVTA buses in western Massachusetts, said Ronald Bibinetetto, transportation planner.

The grant, comprised of 80 percent federal funding and 20 percent local funding, is given to the Pioneer Valley Planning Commission every year in an effort to realize the needs of the community, Bibinetetto said.

"With the grant we can take a closer look at what the community needs, and work with the community in giving them what they need from the PVTA," he said.

As part of a long range program, the PVPC is conducting a study called "Transit 1990," in which the community will look at the changing needs for service in the Pioneer Valley, he said.

Short-range planning includes forming a disabled task force, expanding service for the elderly, computerizing route maps and evaluating areas requesting PVTA routes, he said.

There are several requests now pending for expanded bus routes to health centers, Bibinetetto said.

The Urban Mass Transportation Administration, which gives similar grants across the country, is a division of the U.S. Department of Transportation, which regulates and assists public transportation systems.

Vote for CAG officers rescheduled for October

Charges against Reilly & Zarganes dropped

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Area Government has rescheduled its elections for Oct. 5 to include the presidential and vice presidential races, members of the CAG Governing Board said yesterday.

The elections had been delayed because of a Student Government Association Student Judiciary investigation of last April's presidential elections and accusations of illegal voting and negative campaigning by CAG co-presidents-elect Tim Reilly and Alex Zarganes.

On Monday, the judiciary dismissed the case, citing Zarganes' departure from the University. The commuters' constitution states that when a co-officer leaves for any reason, the other officer may not take office alone, but must run in a special election.

Brian-James Crawford, a member of the Governing Board, said that the case interfered with the commuters' work in areas such as programming. "The [controversy] the judiciary threw us into slowed us down," Crawford said. "There were problems pulling off programming."

He also said the controversy surrounding the elections, along with the political battles among CAG members, hurt the commuters' ability to recruit new people, who he said could have helped CAG.

"The political biases [among the members of CAG] affected the Commuter Area Government's reputation," Crawford said. "People don't take us seriously."

Robb Smith, who ran for CAG co-president with Ted Chambers, said the negative campaigning during last April's election also hurt the commuters.

"During the last election, nobody was talking about the issues," Smith said. "Students weren't being served."

Last Wednesday, during the first meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate, acting CAG President Clarinda Rose-Turner announced her candidacy for president. She was not available for comment yesterday.

Nominations will re-open today and will continue until next Thursday, Crawford said.

Nuke plants poison ecosystem; Harm 'irreversible,' expert says

By BETH O'TOOLE
Collegian Correspondent

Nuclear waste emitted from nuclear power plants across the nation has contaminated the ecosystem, penetrated the food chain and led to epidemics such as cancer and leukemia, author Norman Solomon said in a lecture early this week.

Solomon lectured on "Nuclear Waste Clean-up" to a group of about 40 people in Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College. The lecture was part of the college's three-week colloquy on Restoring the Earth: Strategies for a Just and Sustainable Future.

"It is difficult to keep in mind the enormity of what is at stake [due to nuclear waste]," Solomon said.

Solomon said there is always some release of radiation from nuclear power plants, including those that are not currently or activated.

This nuclear waste contaminates the food chain by penetrating water and soil, he said. Traveling animals, such as birds and rodents, who come in contact with radioactive material, increase the range of affected areas, he said.

"We are engaged in a war with nature whether we want to be a part of that war or not," he said. "Its really a civil war — one that is impossible for us to win.'

Nuclear waste cannot be "cleaned" out of the environment chain once it is deposited, he said.

"It can't be taken out of soil and if inhaled [by people or animals] it can't be taken out," he said.

Solomon urged community members to participate in efforts to halt the distribution of nuclear waste and the threat it poses to the health of our environment.

> "It is difficult to keep in mind the enormity of what is at stake (due to nuclear waste)"
> –Norman Solomon

"The only way to protect the ecosystem is by eternal diligence of the individual," he said.

Companies who pollute the ecosystem are "ironically" promoting involvement in the nuclear waste clean-up, he said.

"Many advertisers in National Geographic have been polluting [the environment] in the last ten years," he said.

Solomon explained that society is moving to irreversible damage concerning the food chain, genetics, and nuclear war and he encourages a reassessment of the role of nuclear weapons.

Gorby: party to be 'updated'

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist party today handed President Mikhail S. Gorbachev a chance next year to overhaul the party, which he said was being left behind by the nation's rapid social changes.

The party's 251-member Central Committee, its policy-making body, opened a meeting primarily devoted to ethnic unrest throughout the Soviet Union. But its first move was to reschedule the next congress of about 5,000 party delegates for October 1990, the Tass news agency said.

"The decision to convene the congress at an earlier date is dictated by the need to thoroughly update the party itself, with regard for its new role as the political vanguard of society during the state of restructuring," Gorbachev told the Central Committee.

He said the need to renew the party applied to the Central Committee itself.

A congress theoretically is the party's most powerful body, setting broad policy lines as well as determining the membership of the Central Committee and the ruling Politburo. It historically has reviewed the leadership's economic plans for the ensuing five years.

Congresses are usually held every five years, and by party regulations the next congress would not have had to take place before early 1991. The last, the 27th in the Communist Party's history, was held in February 1986.

That was a less than a year after Gorbachev took power, when the Soviet leader had not yet accumulated as much power as he has now.

Gorbachev expressed concern that the party is lagging behind the political reforms he has set in motion — including the shift of more political power to elected government bodies.

"The reconstruction forces are going at such a rhythm that we often cannot catch up with them," Gorbachev said. He said many party organizations were slow to grasp the need for change, and "in this, we lose a great deal."

"We cannot leave things as they are, especially since fundamental economic and social processes are unfolding and an ideological and political struggle is under way over key problems of social development," Gorbachev said.

Super RAs: A new breed?

They're willing to enforce, but how much is too much?

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
and KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

It's a Saturday night. There are wild and loud parties everywhere. A party in one dorm room is particularly out of control.

One drunken reveller walks into the women's bathroom. An RA confronts him. A conflict ensues between several RAs and the partiers. The RAs are verbally harassed and threatened. One RA is physically assaulted. The police are called in.

> "I think that these policies alienate the RAs from the students"
> –Mary Beth Baldassarri, John Quincy Adams Tower RA

This incident occurred in Coolidge Residence Hall last weekend. The incident provokes a series of questions regarding residential housing policies at the University of Massachusetts.

Is the extent to which the RAs are asked to enforce policies appropriate? Does it force them to become too much of a law enforcer, taking away from their role as a peer counselor? Is housing unrealistically trying to create "Super RAs?"

Housing policies strictly enforced

There are no new housing policies this semester, according to Larry Moneta, Associate Director of Housing Services for Residential Education. The RAs have only been asked to enforce the existing policies "more consistently and appropriately," he said.

In 1985, UMass formed a coherent residential alcohol policy which it has been enforcing since that time.

Ellen Goodrick, an RA in Grayson Residence Hall, said she does not think it is appropriate to ask RAs to "card" residents for identification.

"I don't get paid enough to put myself in a situation that's potentially life threatening," said Goodrick.

Butterfield RA Jessica Potts said it seems to be a consensus of the RAs in the Butterfield-Van Meter cluster that RAs should not have the authority to card people.

Student Government Association President Tracy Davis said she thinks there is definitely a problem with the residential policies. At last week's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting she forwarded a motion, which passed unanimously, setting up an advisory committee consisting of area government presidents. The committee's first task is to review housing policy guidelines.

"[The policies] are setting up an antagonistic relationship between RAs and their residents," said Davis. "The housing office is so far removed from reality that it's hard for them to envision the situation they're creating."

Davis said asking RAs to card residents is undermining their authority.

"The residents are going to revolt," she said. "RAs shouldn't be expected to do the job of police officers. Housing forgets that RAs are students."

Davis said she thinks RAs should have more input into housing policy formulation.

Liz Rensenbrink, an RA in Grayson Residence Hall, agrees.

"There should be more student input in making the rules," said Rensenbrink. "If students complain, it's hard to defend the rules if they aren't yours. You just have to say 'Those are the rule.'"

RAs' social lives invaded

One housing policy involves RAs' off-campus social activities. According to Moneta, if an RA walks into a party or a bar and sees a student drinking who the RA knows to be underage, the RA is expected to leave the situation.

"RAs can't knowingly participate in drinking with people they know to be minors," said Moneta. "It wouldn't be consistent with our message to say it's not O.K. in the dorms but it's O.K. in bars.

RA Potts said she understands the university's view on this policy but she does not think RAs should be forced to leave a party. She added that the University is infringing upon time that she does not feel is part of her job.

"When I leave campus and go out with my friends, that's time off," she said.

RA Goodrick said she felt it was unfair when RAs were told not to come back to their dorm rooms if they are drunk.

"Excuse me," said Goodrick. "It's my room."

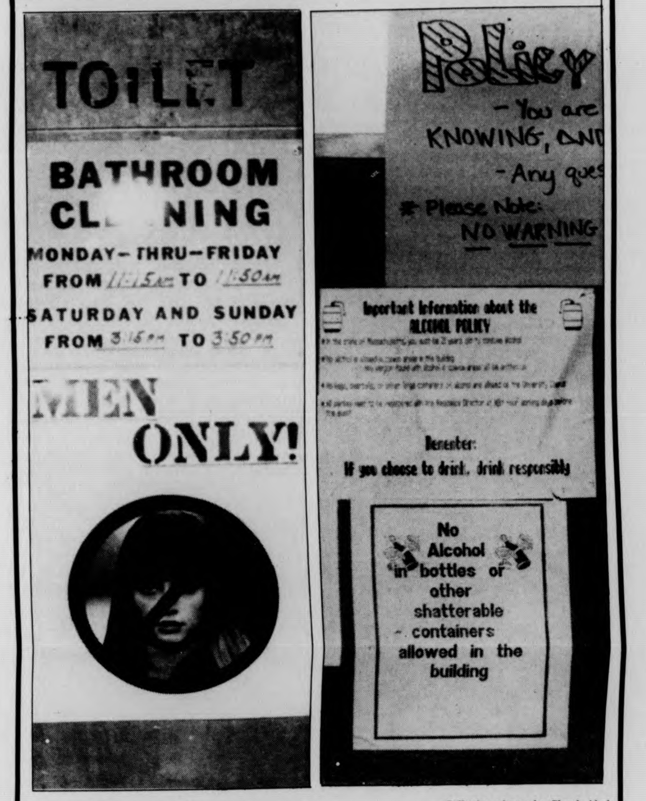
Mary Beth Baldassarri, a senior RA in John Quincy Adams Residence Tower said she thinks this off-campus monitoring is unfair to RAs.

"If I am going to do that, give me a badge. I am not a bouncer in a bar or a police officer," Baldassarri said.

She added, "I think that these policies alienate the RAs from the students."

Rift between RAs and students

Nick, an Orchard Hill RA whose name has been changed to protect his identity, said if he acts too much like a police officer, his residents will not trust him.



Collegian photos by Chuck Abel

Similar signs are appearing in many residence halls at UMass

"Society accepts underage drinking. It's hard to teach against society," he said.

He added that he doesn't see anything wrong with underage drinking although it is against the housing policy.

He continued, "Most college students drink. If I can drink more responsibly and be a role model that way, I think more students could identify with me."

RA Jessica Potts, who said she drinks occasionally, said she has the right to exercise responsible drinking.

"I won't drink in a situation where a resident can find out about it," said Potts, "but I shouldn't have to leave a party just because a resident is partying there."

Chris Fritz, a resident in Grayson said he does not think the limitations on RAs off-campus activities are unfair.

"They volunteered," said Fritz. "They knew what they were getting into."

Eighteen year-old Jen Wolkowski said she feels like a child because she has to hide her drinking from her RA.

"I can't trust her," she said.

RA Rensenbrink said "closet drinking" is one of the problems with strictly enforcing the alcohol policy.

"Closet drinkers could have a problem," said Rensenbrink. "If we don't know, we won't be able to help them, and that's what we're here for."

RA Nick said the concept of "super RAs" is ridiculous.

He said, "I think [the Housing Office] expects RAs to be above society. I am not going to change the person who I am because of these policies."

SWAG names officers

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The Southwest Area Government this week announced the names of incoming officers for this semester.

Robert Monaghan, who lost his bid for student trustee last semester, was elected president last spring.

Also elected were Jennifer Shea and Susan Church as co-vice presidents, and Stanley Drasky as treasurer.

But according to Monaghan, Drasky does not have housing in Southwest and is therefore ineligible to serve.

At this time, Drasky does not have signature power and may be asked to forfeit his position, Monaghan said.

However, Monaghan defended Drasky, claiming his lack of housing is a violation of his right to due process by the Housing Office.

"Presently, SWAG has been severely impeded by this irresponsible action of the SGA because there is not an officer trained in financial matters and qualified to ensure proper management and dispersement of SWAG funds," he said.

Dym, who has been a UMass professor for 18 years, said yesterday he has no knowledge of Project Forecast II or of any link between his research and the project.

Leavitt said: "What we're having here is active participation on campus with the DOD. It's the militarization of the campus. When you have a relationship like this, it makes it pretty obvious."

According to Defense documents, Gen. Lawrence A. Skantze, overseeing Project Forecast II, corresponded with a team of 175 military experts and other contacts to develop ideas for the project. These correspondences included at least one letter to Dr. Samuel Conti, vice chancellor for research, and dean of the UMass graduate school.

Dym said he and a professor, Steve Fenves, from Carnegie Mellon University, Pittsburgh, decided to research the systems in 1982. Dym went on sabbatical until 1984 at Stanford University, Stanford, Calif., where he conducted KBS research funded by Xerox Corp.

"This whole project came about because of ideas I had," he said. "I found someone willing to fund the project."

The research currently being funded by the Defense Department has thus far focused on instructions to design copy machines and other structures, he said. There has been no research conducted specifically concerning the Air Force, he said.

"There's no doubt in my mind that the Defense Department has a strong interest in artificial intelligence but I don't think the project we're doing is in any way involved with Project Forecast II," Dym said.

"Whether it fits into some larger piece of the puzzle, I couldn't say," he said.

HEALTH CARE PLAN — Speaking from a special radiology room at the Concord Hospital yesterday, N.H. Gov. Judd Gregg announced a special committee he appointed to examine the availability of costs and health care in the state. The 18-member commission will prepare a report for the governor by the end of the year.

Gōbie: Frank knew about sex service

BOSTON (AP) — Stephen Gobie reiterated that U.S. Rep. Barney Frank knew he was running an escort service out of the congressman's Washington apartment during an appearance yesterday on the Geraldo talk show.

"He not only was aware of it, there were actions taken by the congressman that enabled and facilitated the operation," Gobie said.

He appeared on the Geraldo show taped last week and aired Tuesday, for a show titled "X-Rated Washington."

Gobie said he ran a female escort service, called "A Touch of Class" from the congressman's apartment. He ran a staff of 10 to 20 women. A friend who ran a male escort service also occasionally call-forwarded telephone service to Gobie, he said.

BU may reconsider school experiment

BOSTON (AP) — Boston University paved its way to running the schools of impoverished Chelsea with promises of gold from donors eager to support the educational experiment.

But such gifts are only slowly coming in, and the university is now warning the city it might bow out of its 10-year plan to takeover and make over Chelsea schools if the city doesn't come up with more money of its own.

Peter Greer, dean of the BU School of Education, said yesterday that it will succeed, but just wanted to "plant a seed" that the community must provide funding of its own.

"If . . . there is not an increased effort by the city to support its public schools, then it is likely that the schools will continue to decline and that the cycle of poverty will continue," said BU's report last week to the school committee.

FAA asks for look at DC-10 fan disks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration yesterday ordered a detailed inspection in the fan disks of all DC-10 engines similar to the one investigators believe failed before the Iowa crash-landing that killed 112 people.

FAA Administrator James B. Busey announced the formal inspections before a congressional panel, where he and national Transportation Safety Board Chairman James Kolstad both declared the DC-10 jumbo jet safe.

French residents of Gosier, near Point-a-Pitre inspect Monday the debris of their house which was destroyed by hurricane Hugo during the night of Saturday to Sunday. The Hurricane killed five, injured some 80 others and made more than 10,000 homeless.

Hugo thrashes P.R.; Bahamas to be next

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Hurricane Hugo spun toward the Bahamas yesterday after scouring Puerto Rico with 125 mph winds, leaving more than 50,000 people homeless throughout the eastern Caribbean. An official reported at least 25 dead.

Hugo hit northeastern Puerto Rico and then skirted its populous northern coast on Monday. It roared onto the northwest and toward open water, its hurricane-force winds missing the Dominican Republic.

At 9 a.m. EDT yesterday, the hurricane's center was near latitude 21.8 degrees north and longitude 68.1 west, about 195 miles east of Grand Turk Island in the southern Bahamas, according to the National Weather Service. Winds fell to 105 mph.

Forecasters said Hugo likely would hit the U.S. mainland later in the week but said it was too early to predict where. Cruise ships steamed out of the way, residents prepared along the North Carolina coast, and Florida residents jammed the phone lines of insurance companies.

At least 25 people in the Caribbean died from the storm, said Cizanette Rivera, a spokeswoman for the Civil Defense in Puerto Rico. She said three of those victims were from Puerto Rico and dismissed an earlier National Weather Service statement that said 25 had died on the U.S. commonwealth.

Rivera said two people died about 15

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Bush drug plan is racist

Last Friday, the Collegian ran a page of editorials on the drug war. They advertised for submissions in advance, but somehow nobody wrote in to support the plan put forth by our putative Drug Czar William Bennett. Somehow, the soaring rhetoric of President Bush failed to reach the collective heart of the University of Massachusetts. Somehow.

Al Arpad

I was surprised that most of the respondents to the Collegian supported legalization of some or all psychoactive drugs. But I am often surprised by the unanimity with which intelligent people recognize that legalization is the only solution offering at least a partial improvement in the whole range of social problems caused by drug use. Thoughtful people of all political persuasions will generally consider the merits of drug legalization.

Unfortunately, across America, thoughtful and intelligent people seem to be in the minority.

A recent national survey showed that a majority of Americans would be willing to "give up some of the freedoms we have as Americans" in order to fight drugs. Cynical as I am, I can't believe that mere stupidity accounts for a response like that. Even Americans who watch "Wheel of Fortune" are smart enough to enjoy freedom. If Americans don't care about freedom. . .

But they do.

Americans care about their freedom, but most Americans don't expect to see the drug war in their neighborhoods. Most Americans don't live in the inner-city.

Most of the Americans who do live in the inner-city are Black, and the rest of us recognize that inner-city Blacks, and especially Black children, are the first victims of the drug war — no matter how it is fought. We all agree that's tragic, but what can we do?

What President Bush proposes to do is put more drug users and dealers in jail. Mostly Black users and dealers. In jail. Like Willie Horton.

Get it?

I will reiterate. President Bush's drug program, which offers little new funding and no likelihood of actually reducing the quantity of drugs in the United States, is popular because it promises to put lots of Black men in jail.

President Bush, William Bennett and the prophets of middle class Whiteness who own most of the editorial pages in this country and support the drug war are not overtly prejudiced; that would not be popular. But an ongoing crusade that purports to rescue Black babies by systematically criminalizing and imprisoning their parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles or neighbors is very popular.

I don't like the conclusion I've come to.

Maybe most Americans just want what's best for themselves and their children. Maybe most Americans just want what's best for their brothers and sisters in the ghetto. Maybe most Americans are tired of hearing about drugs and wish they could see something else when they turn on the TV.

Maybe most Americans don't expect to do drugs, or else don't expect to get caught. Maybe most Americans never expect to do anything of enough significance to warrant investigation. Maybe most Americans are so secure in their pale, suburban anonymity that they don't need constitutional protections anymore.

Radical newspaper columnists and other suspicious characters who do need constitutional protections are worried.

A new Paula Abdul re-mix?

"A snake wearing a coat and tie is nothing but a well-dressed snake."
— Israeli Knesset member Benny Begin.

"He's a cold-hearted snake. Look into his eyes — he's been telling lies. He's a cold-hearted snake. He don't play by rules. Girl, don't play the fool!"
— Singer, dancer, choreographer Paula Abdul.

Ah, the joys of terrorism. While his people linger in the filth of the Gaza strip, PLO chairman Yasser Arafat cruises the Mediterranean, living it up in five-star hotels. The PLO's murderer-in-chief, who has shed his snakey media image, dines with heads of state and the pope.

Darren Garnick

Pope John Paul II's acceptance of Arafat's Christmas gift (a carved nativity scene) last year, says it all. Perhaps this holiday season the duo will go caroling in Lebanon — if there are any Christian homes left after the Syrian blitz. Arafat is proof that a crafty public relations campaign can transform a repugnant killer into a teddy bear.

Pulitzer Prize-winner Thomas Friedman wrote in From Beirut to Jerusalem that Arafat "learned a lesson from Kurdish rebel leader Mustafa Barzani. Barzani was once asked why the Kurdish national liberation movement, which he led, never got the world attention of some other national liberation movements, like the Palestinians. Barzani said it was simple: 'Because we fought only on our own land and we killed our own enemies.'

"The PLO under Arafat did not make that mistake. They took their war to other peoples countries; they killed non-combatants as well as people who had nothing to do with their conflict. They always fought on the world stage as much as in the Middle East, and they consistently reaped the benefits."

Killing for publicity. From its massacre of 11 Israeli athletes at the 1972 Munich Olympics to the 1985 hijacking of Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro, the PLO has plenty of blood to ink its archives. Firebombs. Carbombs. Letter-bombs. Generic no-name bombs. If you're an innocent civilian, the PLO has the right bomb for you.

But fear no more. The PLO's 1985 Cairo Declaration states that international targets will no longer be terrorized. Terrorism against Israel — that capitalist, Zionist, racist, imperialist blemish in the peace-loving egalitarian Arab world — is not terrorism. In the PLO thesaurus, it is "armed struggle" against the enemy.

That is, "armed struggle" against toddlers at Israeli playgrounds, tourists playing beach paddleball, and students picking fruit on the kibbutzim. The PLO prefers to shoot at those who can not shoot back.

At the 1988 United Nations session in Geneva, Arafat convinced the West that PLO now stands for Peace Loving Organization — the terrorism is over, and Israel has the PLO's approval to exist. Maybe the PLO has employed a poor translator, because their statements in English and Arabic are drastically different. In February 1989, Salah Khalaf (second in command to Arafat) told the newspaper Al Watan that "There was no PLO recognition of Israel, neither in the Palestine National Council decisions in Algiers nor in Arafat's address to the U.N. in Geneva."

Elaborating on his interpretation of peaceful coexistence, Khalaf said "At first we want a small state, and with the help of Allah, it will be made large and expand to the east, west, north and south. I'm interested in the liberation of Palestine, step by step."

Once again with apologies to Paula Abdul: Straight up now tell me, Yasser, are you going to love Israel forever? Or is this just another hit-and-run?

A need to provide their own Escort Service

I am writing about the news that the Walking Student Security Escort Service has been cancelled due to budget cuts. This cuts back the service considerably. I am a Resident Assistant in the Webster/Dickinson cluster in Orchard Hill. Before I knew of this, I had praised the Escort Service to my floor, new students and upperclassmen alike. "This service", I said, "is here for you to use to protect your own personal safety. Use it. Don't take a chance with your lives."

I told them that although UMass is not a crime capital, walking alone on campus at night was an unnecessary risk, so why chance it?

After preaching and praising, I found out that due to state budget cuts, UMass no longer has a Walking Escort Service.

Now, after my residents were made aware of the dangers of walking alone at night, I was forced to tell them that they have to take a chance.

Students have another choice. They can stay in at night, not use the library or the Campus Center, OR they can go out at night and wonder if they are going to make it home without being assaulted, raped, or worse.

Student security should be one of our university's most important assets. Yet, the security receptionists hold the lowest paying jobs on campus.

Is this justified?

Living in Orchard Hill, which is a dangerous and isolated area, I would rather have members of my floor feel that they could call me or anyone else in our community, than put their own lives at risk. I don't want to lose any residents this year. Many of the floors in my cluster are creating their own "Escort Service."

We should not have to do this, but we are concerned for our own safety.

I know that due to budget cuts classes have been eliminated, but this is an outrage! Our lives should be considered more important than classes.

As a concerned RA, and a concerned student, I am asking the administration and all UMass students to consider the dangers of this campus, and reconsider the elimination of the Escort Service.

UMass funds?

In Friday's Collegian, the article about the budget cuts rally on Thursday reported that Rep. Stan Rosenberg ("Hundreds attend budget cuts rally at S.U.B.") said that Massachusetts has the second lowest tax rate in the country but is 40 percent above the national average in tuition and fees paid by students in public higher education.

Frank E. Bowrys

"Taxachusetts" has the second highest personal income tax per capita in the country, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. What Rosenberg said was that Massachusetts has the second lowest tax rate in the nation for businesses.

The article also stated that Jonathan Leavitt, representing People for a Socially Responsible University, read a short statement. What the article did not say was that Leavitt detailed why Massachusetts businesses pay so little in taxes. The Massachusetts High Technology Council, a group of Massachusetts defense contractors, was formed in 1977. In 1979, the Council joined forces with Citizens for Limited Taxation, donating $30,000 (60 percent of all contributions) in the campaign to pass Proposition 2 1/2. The MHTC signed what was termed a "social contract" with Gov. Ed King earlier that same year, pledging the creation of 60,000 jobs over the next four years if the total tax burden was reduced. The tax burden was reduced from 5th in 1978 to 22nd in 1982 and the jobs were created. (In 1988, total tax revenue was 10th in the nation, so Massachusetts is not a poor state.) It was this "social contract" for which the "Massachusetts Miracle" was credited.

However, Proposition 2 1/2 decimated public education while Massachusetts defense contracts increased from $4.6 billion in 1981 to $9 billion in 1986. Last year Massachusetts only received $7.1 billion in defense contracts, hence the "Massachusetts Miracle" goes bankrupt. At the University level, 2 percent of total research and 40 percent of all federal funds come from the DOD.

King also created the Board of Regents of Higher Education in 1981. Six of the original 16 members represented High Technology. The board was completed by business executives and representatives from private colleges that compete with public educational institutions. When UMass offers a low cost, quality education, private institutions suffer. This is why the cost of a public higher educational institution is 40 percent above the national average while the state of Massachusetts ranks 49th in the amount of money it spends on public higher education. The University now exhibits this dependence on DOD funds. This is where the money is at the federal level (roughly 2/3 of all federal R&D funds are defence) and high technology has been demanding that public education produce a work force responsive to its need, military contracting.

As the defense money is drying up, contractors are recognizing a need to diversify. PSRU has made this same call for diversification under the term economic conversion. It's time we recognize this as well as demanding that business pays its fair share of taxes and the state lives up to its obligation to fund public higher education.

who was on the Chinese authorities' most-wanted list when he escaped from China. Wu'er is now a student at Harvard University, Shen is at Brandeis University and Liu is studying at Boston University.

She wrote the words to "For Momma," a dialogue between a mother and her son. "It's a mother very worried if her son is safe," said Shen, 21, whose father died about a month ago in China.

The three students used a backup band with instruments similar to Bruce Springsteen's, King said. But Shen likened the songs to the "slower rock" he prefers, like the Beatles and Simon and Garfunkel.

Shen said he sang songs like "The Sound of Silence" in high school.

The Chinese songs were written by Jimmy Jang, a local musician who approached the students with the idea, Shen said. Musicians donated their time, and the studio, Soundtrack, recorded the songs at bargain-basement prices, King said.

Ordinarily, it would cost about $45,000 to produce three songs in a studio, King said. He estimated the student's tapes will cost only about $1,200. Money from the tapes will go to a Democracy for China fund, Shen said.

But money wasn't on the students' minds when they made the recordings. The songs are one more way to keep the democracy movement's message alive, Shen said. The students plan to distribute the tape in Hong Kong and Taiwan.

"A lot of people travel between Hong Kong and China," he said.

"If the song becomes very popular and it's in everybody's mouth, it's easy to spread in China."

A biology major, Shen said he isn't prepared to give up his studies for outrageous clothes and big cars if rock stardom comes his way.

■ UWW cut

But in the future, he said, the "extremity of the cuts will make the University less accessible to the very people who support it with their taxes."

He said the cutbacks threaten the ability of non-traditional students, those who are not of the usual 18 to 25 college age, to complete their education at the Uniiversity.

"Who actually has the right to be here: only young students out of high school or all members of the Commonwealth?" he asked.

Bernhard blamed "a crisis of nerve at the state level" for the overall cuts in education, but added that UMass administrators used poor judgment in deciding to halve UWW's budget.

UWW has been providing an access point to public education for adult students since 1971. The program has over 1,000 alumni and works with more than 300 faculty at the University and other affiliated colleges.

In addition to the learning center on the University's Amherst campus, UWW maintains centers at Springfield Technical Community College and at the UMass Medical School in Worcester.

Recent UWW graduate Sydney Fingold said she returned to the UMass learning center in Worcester after a 30-year absence from college. "It would have been an impossible situation commuting from Framingham to Amherst while working full-time," said the health science librarian and mother of two.

Pacino keeps Sea of Love above water

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Correspondent

When Al Pacino was waiting on the set of The Godfather to film his first scene with Marlon Brando, a production assistant came up to the visibly nervous actor and asked him what was wrong. Pacino shook his head and said, "You don't understand. I'm about to do a scene with God."

It was this very kind of nervous energy that made Pacino one of the premiere actors in Hollywood throughout the 1970's. His performances in both Godfather films (which were inexplicably overlooked for Oscars), Dog Day Afternoon, ...And Justice For All, and William Friedkin's Cruising were marked by a powerful command of the camera that brought an unnerving sense of apprehension to his characters.

Then in 1984, the bottom fell out. Brian DePalma's Scarface, a brutal and highly controversial film about the rise and fall of Cuban drug czar Tony Montana, was crucified by the critics for its glorification of violence and Pacino's high-velocity performance, that often went out of control and eventually reduced itself to a parody. Expectations were high in 1985, with Hugh Hudson's Revolution, but that film proved to be an utter disaster with Pacino horribly miscast as a French fur trader. Pacino's career was placed in question.

After a four year disappearance from the silver screen, Pacino has returned in Harold Becker's Sea of Love. The film doesn't come close to capturing the power of Pacino's earlier performances, but make no mistake, Pacino is back on track.

Pacino and John Goodman (from the television sitcom Rosanne) play two New York homocide detectives tracking down a killer with an appetite for knocking off men who write poetic ads in a local magazine. Pacino and Goodman, convinced the killer is a woman, submit their own ad and arrange to take turns dating the respondents in hopes of getting their prints on a wine glass. When Ellen Barkin answers their ad and shows up sizzling brighter than her red leather jacket, Pacino sits up and takes notice. "I believe in animal attraction. I believe in falling in love," she tells him, and he is hooked.

THE SCREENING ROOM

His life is thrown into a midlife crisis, from a bitter divorce and 22nd anniversary on the job. Pacino approaches cautiously, his past experiences with women keeping him on edge. When they first rendezvous at his place, he jumps her coming out of the bathroom after he spots a pistol in her purse that she later claims is for self-defense. He realizes he's falling for her, but doesn't quite know whether to pursue her or hunt her down. Despite warnings from Goodman to just let her go and treat her as a suspect, Pacino resists an opportunity to turn in a wine glass with her prints on it. When he falls in love with her, his feelings seem justified in that she doesn't come off as the siren she's supposed to be.

Although Barkin captivates the camera with her slinky moves and striking sexuality, she never places us on edge. There's a sense of vulnerability and loneliness about her that disarms her as a threat.

When Pacino eventually finds the torn-out pages from the classifieds hanging on the refrigerator with the names of the murdered men circled, the truth seems unavoidable. But when he confronts her, Barkin retreats into confusion and alarm, rather than into a corner like a trapped rat. We know that she is innocent, but like Pacino, we know she shouldn't be. It just doesn't make sense. It doesn't add up. I can't go on any further without giving away the ending, but Barkin will keep you guessing right up until the end. It's her performance that really fuels the film, seducing the camera from the minute she walks onto the screen.

Director Harold Becker does an adequate job at building moments of suspense and confusion, but at times he plays up too many cliches common to this genre. The film is filled with its share of jolts and dark hallways that tend to cheapen the film's highly charged atmosphere. Becker borrows heavily from Adrian Lyne's Fatal Attraction and 9½ Weeks, with Pacino and Barkin getting involved in some highly erotic situations. But he can't pull it off with the same slickness. His camera seems more like a quiet observer than a voyeur. But give Becker some credit; he builds Richard Price's script into a genuinely effective thriller that manages not to self-destruct. Sea of Love is by no means a triumphant return to the screen for Al Pacino, but it's a solid start in the right direction.

More tough New York cops are on the way. Due out this Friday is Ridley Scott's long awaited thriller, Black Rain. Michael Douglas and Andy Garcia play a couple of New York cops tracking down a killer through the Japanese underworld. The film went way over budget, forcing the crew to return from on-location shooting in Japan to rap things up in L.A. The film was originally scheduled for release in August, but was placed on the back burner to avoid competition with Lethal Weapon II. Also worthy of interest, is Spike Lee's Joe's Bed-Stuy Barbershop: We Cut Heads. It's Lee's first full-length film, the one he did for his NYU film school thesis. The film is scheduled to open on Wednesday of this week at the Pleasant St. Theater in Northampton with a special showing of the documentary The Making of Do the Right Thing to be shown first.

Earthshaking beauty on show for all at Tower Library

Grad student's work featured

By DAVE COUSINEAU
Collegian Correspondent

A tiny, white stone balanced delicately atop a large, weather-worn, dove-grey rock. Jagged, rust-splotched chunks of metal leaned haphazardly on each other, ready to come crashing down in a clamorous heap at the slightest vibration. Dead branches as smooth and dry as bones thrust themselves toward the sky as if still straining for water and life. Unrecognizable objects of all shapes and sizes stood at cockeyed, precarious angles and lay scattered helter-skelter upon the ground.

I felt as if I had stumbled upon the sacred land of some ancient culture. I stood motionless, my muscles as tense as trip wires. If I moved sharply or breathed too heavily, I'd disrupt the energy or magnetism or whatever it was that held everything here in a state of suspension. Then, everything around me would tumble and topple and shatter, leaving me the only thing standing admist the debris.

This was my initial reaction to an unusual but powerful work by Karen Dolmanisth currently on display at the Tower Library Sculpture Courtyard. First impressions, however, are often misleading, and the more time I spent in the midst of this creation, the more comfortable I became. I still sensed tension and energy, but it appeared more controlled, more balanced, almost natural.

Dolmanisth is a graduate student at UMass who received a B.F.A. from the Parsons School of Design in New York City in 1982. She has also spent four years teaching art at the University of Connecticut's School of Fine Arts, Eastern Connecticut State University, and in various public schools. She has previously created works similar to her current library exhibit in places such as cornfields, reservoirs, barns and empty building sites.

Her work is known as "site specific" sculpture, which means that the area in which it is placed is as much a part of the piece as are the objects which compose it.

For this project, Dolmanisth used the aforementioned rocks, sticks and scrap metal in addition to other natural items such as hay, bones and even a quantity of mulch which the physical plant left her.

She begins with no predetermined idea of what the work will look like. Rather, she collects everything she wishes to use in her area, and proceeds to arrange them, stack them or hang them in whatever configuration appeals to her sense of aesthetics at the time. This is subject to change and therefore, so is the artwork. She alters it each time she visits, changing positions, increasing angles, even rebending the metal pieces by hand to create the desired effect.

Essentially, the work will never be "finished," for even when it is dismantled today between 4 p.m. and 6 p.m., (all are invited to the ceremony) and all the components are returned where they were found, aspects of it will still linger in the courtyard.

Admittedly, Dolmanisth's style often strays from the more conventional genres. But she is a firm believer in freedom of choice and expression "at all costs."

With so many aspects of our lives controlled by others, she feels we all must have some outlet with which to assert our "personal power." This sculpture technique might be just what some people need to achieve this power. In her opinion, no one needs money or schooling to be an artist. They merely need imagination, some objects which appeal to them, and a few people who will understand.

There is nothing complex in her work. In fact, the simpler she keeps her images, the more she feels viewers will get out of them, be it consciously or not. Inevitably, some people will look at the work and try to form something recognizable to them. This is fine in the creator's eyes because that process, "like forming pictures in the clouds," helps strengthen our imagination.

If you want to strengthen your imagination, or are just interested in examining a sculpture which ranges in content from the meticulous arrangement of tiny pebbles to huge figures composed of earth, then take a moment to visit the courtyard. See and feel for yourself. There is more there than meets the eye.

Hands-on training offered at UVC

By REBECCA HULSTROM
Collegian Correspondent

"Production, not theory," is the promise from the Union Video Center (UVC) president and senior communications major, Thom DeVita.

In a school where hands-on experience is practically non-existent for communications majors, UVC is a blessing. The center offers use of their camera equipment and editing room for all undergraduate members who are willing to donate time to the organization.

"For communication majors who have to deal with oversubscribed production classes, UVC offers a real alternative in a less formal atmosphere," DeVita said.

The Union Video Center is a student-run television station that operates a closed-circuit system shown primarily on the television sets located throughout the Student Union Building.

At one time, UVC programming was mostly limited to taping lectures of the Distinguished Visitors Program and reruns of old cult classics such as A Clockwork Orange. This is something they are moving away from.

This year, with the advent of the telecommunications project, the Union Video Center is hoping to get a channel when the University-wide cable system is installed late next year.

The channel, in theory, would be entirely student run and programmed, with features such as a Five-College movie review program, news shows, and creative and documentary videos from students, which they will be able to make using UVC equipment.

"Without the voice, and input, of the students," DeVita said, "this goal is impossible to reach."

Currently, the UVC is involved in updating its equipment from an archaic beta system to the state-of-the-art technology of super VHS, including professional quality camcorders and computer graphic technologies. Already most of their older cameras and production equipment has been replaced and they are expecting new editing equipment as well.

New members are not required to have any video experience. UVC offers a four-part (approximately one month) hands-on workshop cycle to orient new members to the functions and procedures of the UVC and to teach basic production and editing skills.

There will be a meeting for all those intrested in joining UVC at 7 p.m. tomorrow in Campus Center Room 168.

Waterboys tix on sale today

UPC has announced that tickets for the Oct. 21 Waterboy's concert at the Fine Arts Center are now on sale. People wishing to purchase tickets may do so at the FAC box office.

Tickets are $7 for UMass students and $11 for the general public.

The Waterboys, led by Mike Scott, hail from Ireland and have had limited success in the United States, first with the single "Whole of the Moon" off of their This is the Sea album, and most recently with the title cut off of their brilliant new album, Fisherman's Blues.

The band's distinctive sound, complete with violins, demonstrates a perfect blend of Irish folk and rock and roll.

She gave no breakdown on where the other reported victims had died, but scattered fatalities were reported throughout the heavily visited tourist islands of the eastern Caribbeans.

Hugo left a trail of smashed homes, power failures and injuries in Guadeloupe, Montserrat, Antiqua and the Virgin Islands since Sunday, and widespread looting by machete-wielding mobs was reported on the island of St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Cleanup efforts were under way today throughout Puerto Rico. Gov. Rafael Hernandez-Colon said at least 27,900 people were left homeless and asked President Bush to declare it a disaster area.

America's Cup returned to US from New Zealand after court reversal

NEW YORK (AP) – The America's Cup was returned to the San Diego Yacht Club on Tuesday, when an appeals court reversed a decision that awarded yachting's most coveted prize to New Zealand.

The New York State Supreme Court's Appellate Division affirmed the victory by Dennis Conner and Stars and Stripes in waters off San Diego last fall. New Zealand had sued, arguing that Conner's use of a catamaran violated the Cup's deed of gift.

Justice Caremen Beauchamp Ciparick of the New York State Supreme Court agreed with New Zealand April 7. She called the race 'a gross mismatch,' stripped San Diego of the Cup and gave it to New Zealand's Mercury Bay Boating Club. But a five-judge panel reversed her on Tuesday and returned the Cup to the United States.

"San Diego's catamaran was an eligible yacht," Justice Joseph P. Sullivan wrote in a 30-page majority opinion. "It was the winner of the two races held on Sept. 7 and 9, 1988, for the America's Cup and ... as the winner of the two races, is entitled to the America's Cup."

Justice Israel Rubin of the First Judicial Department concurred as part of the 4-1 majority, saying "between true yachtsmen, victory is pursued on the water and not in the courtroom."

"San Diego Yacht Club should not be deprived of its victory simply because the design of its vessel was more innovative and more successful in achieving its purpose than that of the challenger," Rubin said.

Justices E. Leo Milonas, and Richard W. Wallach joined Sullivan and Rubin in the majority opinion. Justice Bentley Kassal dissented, saying, "I cannot accept that such a gross mismatch was permissible under the deed of gift."

The Cup, first won by the yacht America in 1851, was held by the New York Yacht Club from 1857 until Conner lost it to Australia's Royal Perth Yacht Club in 1983. Conner won it back in 1987 and for two years the trophy has been in a series of lawsuits.

"Obviously, I'm pleased with the decision," Conner said in a statement in San Diego. "It is an exciting victory for my hometown of San Diego and the many individuals who worked to keep the Cup here. But what pleases me the most is to finally get the Cup out of the courts."

However, the decision can be appealed to the New York Court of Appeals, the state's highest court. There was no immediate word on New Zealand's intentions.

Michael Fay, chairman of the New Zealand syndicate, called the reversal "a disgrace."

"It is wrong, plain and simple," he said. "If this ruling is not overturned, sportsmanship and the Cup are out the window."

Ciparick had found competing vessels must be "somewhat evenly matched." San Diego's use of a lighter, faster catamaran "violated the spirit" of the international competition, she ruled.

Robinson to play vs. former coach

BOSTON (AP) – Michigan guard Rumeal Robinson doesn't expect to have a problem deciding who to listen to – his old high school coach or his current college coach – when he plays for one against the other Nov. 27.

Friendship, for a while, will take a back seat to trying to win a basketball game.

Boston University officially announced yesterday that NCAA champion Michigan would visit the Terriers, coached by former Cambridge Rindge and Latin coach Mike Jarvis, for a game at Boston Garden.

"That's one thing about Mr. Jarvis. He put in your mind (that) whoever your coach is, that is your coach," Robinson said. "Once I step on the floor, I know what my job is. And once I step off it, I can go to Mr. Jarvis' house and have dinner."

Jarvis replied, "He's a champion eater as well."

The banter was characteristic of a conference call hook-up Tuesday involving Jarvis, who coached Robinson for three years at Cambridge Rindge and Latin before moving to Boston University, and Robinson.

Jarvis expressed hope that Robinson would "rest well and ... take my advice about taking a couple of months off" so he wouldn't be ready to play against Boston University.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A promotion or business upturn gives you fresh hope and inspiration. Set your sights accordingly. Partners may need a push to get going. Moving forward with confidence. Your self-esteem rises.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You should be happy about the way your plans are going. Your talents are at a peak. Your strong sense of involvement is a big plus in all your undertakings. Pay more attention to your health.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If stuck with a business problem, seek the advice of your friends. Your vocational interests could change abruptly after reading a book or seeing a movie. Romance is fun but holds few surprises.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Morning hours tend to be quiet and uneventful. Your interest will be aroused by noontime, however. It is not always easy to know who is right. A love relationship requires greater finesse.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22): A period of change lies ahead. Travel, study or a brand-new project captures your attention. You can see all the signs. Indulge in some wishful thinking. A cherished dream could come true.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22): Attention to detail is essential. You tackle your work with zeal. Romance gets the green light. Children are thrilled when you attend a school function. You learn something new about parenting.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 22): A straightforward approach is best today. Technological changes and a new independence are the key to bigger profits. Avoid making too many demands on your romantic partner.

SCORPIO (Oct 23-Nov 21): Welcome a unique opportunity to make your move. You find ways to improve your co-workers' performance. A friend gives you something much more important than money. Express your gratitude in a tangible manner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 22-Dec 21): A coveted award comes your way. Higher-ups begin to see you in a different light. An exchange student shares a unique experience. Listen attentively. Romance shifts into high gear.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19): Despite your romantic mood, you and your mate could get off on the wrong foot. Exercise will help you get rid of pent-up emotions. Reduce everyday expenses. Refuse to choose sides in a family feud.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb 18): Contact lawyers before signing contracts. A voice from the past will ignite a long-forgotten passion. Family life is increasingly important to you. Do not let a casual flirtation jeopardize things.

PISCES (Feb 19-March 20): A self-made individual has a tremendous effect on you. You could be thinking of changing your profession. Rearrange your schedules so you can help others. Sign contracts after reading the fine print.

Tri-captain Peter McEvoy's playing status is currently questionable. The junior midfielder sprained his ankle in the first half of the Temple game. McEvoy and a Temple player went up for a header, and upon the impact of landing, the Temple player injured McEvoy's ankle. Sophomore Tom Novajasky will be starting in McEvoy's place.

Sophomore back Darren Stone, who had previously been plagued with knee problems since the first game, played a good amount at Temple and Martin foresees no further problems. Sophomore midfielder Brett Anthony is now nursing an injury but will be starting today against Dartmouth. Freshman Steve Armenti will be making a home debut in the goal. The other starters remain the same.

"We're a solid team which hasn't had the ball bounce the right way," Martin said. "Most teams could look at us now and see our 0-3 record and think nothing of us as far as competition is concerned. Our record doesn't show us to be the threat we can be. If we beat Dartmouth then we can demonstrate to those in and outside the league that we do have a strong team."

Palmer described Carson as 'a very high-strung guy' and added, "I think coaches should coach and players should play. When coaches try to play, there's a problem, and when players try to coach, there's a problem."

After the incident involving Bush, Palmer said, "I told him [Carson] he had become a detrimental force on the team and that we'd best sever company."

Soccer to play first home game

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Correspondent

The "home"—bodies are playing at home and, boy, are they happy campers. The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team will make their home debut today at 3 p.m. on the Hill against Dartmouth College.

"We're glad to be home," said assistant coach John Martin. "We're a good team and this will be our chance to prove it."

Dartmouth won the Ivy League Championship and was ranked third in New England last year. Because of their strict academic guidelines, Dartmouth, like most other Ivy League schools, has just begun their season. Their first game this year was a 1-0 victory over Penn. Dartmouth is currently ranked fourth in New England and stands a good chance of sweeping the Ivy Conference again this season.

About this time in the season last year, UMass fell to Dartmouth in an ineffectual 2-0 effort. The two "lucky" goals were attributed to defensive lapses. "It was a fairly even game, as far as man for man, player for player," Martin said. "We were 3-1-0 for the season and that loss started a three-game losing streak."

Dartmouth's senior forward Vladica Stanojevic, a Yugoslavian exchange student, is a major reason why Dartmouth has been such a formidable force on regional playing fields. "He's probably one of the best forwards in New England," said Martin of Stanojevic's talent. "He's their target player.

"Dartmouth has a style of play that they've been using for three to four years and they play it against everyone," Martin said. "It's a system that works because of Stanojevic. It rips defenses apart.

"If we can shut him down, then we can impose our style of play on them," he said. "Sophomore back Dan Lawrence will aid us in shutting down Stanojevic. By doing that, we'd negate their attack.

"Dartmouth is very good at facing up and going in," said Martin. "Overall, they're a very good team."

Another Big Green commodity is sophomore back John Milne, a Scottish international player who made a huge impact on the Ivy League Conference as a freshman. "Milne is a big kid," said Martin. "He's an intimidating force on the field.

"This is a game where Cesnek and Hanks will have to be very dangerous," said Martin. "If we can consistantly get the ball to those two, we can win a lot of battles."

BU loses co-captain

By RICK SETO and
The Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Boston University's football team lost its first two games. Now it has lost one of its co-captains for the season after a run-in with an assistant coach.

Dennis Carson, a senior linebacker, has been suspended from the team and will miss the remainder of the year, including the Sept. 30 UMass-BU game.

Last year Carson registered 10 tackles (3 solo, 7 assisted) against UMass in a 44-27 loss.

The suspension followed two incidents of insubordination involving Carson last year, Boston University coach Chris Palmer said.

"This was not the first time Dennis has crossed over a line," Palmer said after suspending Carson Sunday night. "He had been warned about being negative."

"I think they over-reacted," said Carson.

He added that defensive coordinator Steve Bush was humiliating a teammate during a defensive team meeting Sunday, two days after the Terriers' record dropped to 0-2 with a 20-19 loss at West Chester (Pa.).

"I got up and said, 'Coach, we get the picture. Can we please move on?'" Carson said.

Palmer, who was in another room at the time, gave this account: "Coach Bush said he was trying to make a point to one of the players who didn't understand his responsibility. ... He was trying to drive home a point and (Carson) reacted to it. Several players said he was out of line, and several coaches said he was out of line."

"As a captain, I am supposed to talk to the coaches," Carson said. "Maybe I was wrong doing it in front of the team."

Governor to consider state football lottery

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Dukakis will seriously consider a bill that would allow the state lottery to run a legal football betting game, a move that would raise an estimated $50 million a year, his chief spokeswoman said Tuesday.

Mindy S. Lubber said that does not necessarily mean football betting will be in the final version of a cost-cutting package the governor will seek to have approved by the Legislature this fall.

"It is true that was one of the pieces under consideration in one of the drafts of the governor's savings, consolidations and cuts packages," she said.

Asked if he would sign the bill even if it was not part of a specific package to bail the state out of its financial problems, Ms. Lubber declined to give a yes-or-no answer.

But she said, "He is more interested in giving more serious consideration to the proposal. Absolutely."

A state-run version of professional football betting was proposed in a bill filed by Rep. William Galvin, D-Boston.

James Hosker, who heads the Lottery Commission, has estimated a football lottery could produce as much as $50 million a year for the state, assuming it operated for a full National Football League season.

The Dukakis budget plan said the football lottery could produce $17 million in state revenues for the rest of this fiscal year, and $33 million in the 1991 fiscal year.

The estimates for the current fiscal year assume quick legislative action on the Galvin bill and quick approval by Dukakis.

The NFL season already is underway and Hosker said the Massachusetts Lottery would need about a two-month lead time before the game could get started.

That still would mean there would be a chance of starting the football card game in time for the Super Bowl and possibly earlier.

If not, the game would start at the beginning of the 1990 regular NFL season.

The Galvin bill envisions a game based on the one now being run in Oregon.

Under that game, bettors can select as few as four games or can choose to bet on all the weekend games and the Monday night game.

The more games selected, the lower the chance is of winning, but the higher the payoff would be.

Hosker has said the game would be relatively simple to start since it would use the computer terminal network already in place for the state's Lotto and Daily Numbers games and because much of the Oregon game could be adopted for Massachusetts.

Women's tennis match rained out again

Yesterday afternoon the University of Massachusetts women's tennis match against the Providence Friars was rained out. It was the second rainout of their many matches.

"We were looking forward to playing; we were really psyched," said coach Edwin Gentzler. "It's really frustrating to get ready for a match and then not play.

"Friday we play the University of New Hampshire. We really need to play if we're going to get any better," said Gentzler.

The Providence match has been rescheduled for 3 p.m. Tuesday at the upper Boyden courts.

Conti: research not linked to USAF

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Dr. Samuel Conti, vice chancellor for research and the dean of the graduate school at the University of Massachusetts, denied claims this week that he is connected with Project Forecast II, a US Air Force initiative to improve future warfighting capabilities.

> "I have never seen this letter. I read all my mail, sure I do. And I certainly read all my important mail."
> – Dr. Samuel Conti

He also denied seeing or receiving a letter on September 8, 1986, from US Gen. Lawrence A. Skantze, who initiated the project for the US Air Force in 1985.

A copy of the letter, which is stamped "Vice Chancellor for Research and Graduate Students" and dated Sept. 8, 1986, was obtained by the Collegian this week.

Skantze said in the letter, "I wrote you last summer — as we kicked off Project Forecast II requesting your assistance in generating ideas for high-leverage or emerging technologies and systems concepts which would allow major improvements in the future Air Force's war fighting capabilties."

"I thank you for your assistance, and know that you will continue to help in maintaining the Air Force's technological edge," the letter also said.

Conti said: "I have never seen this letter. I get a pile of mail a foot high each day. I read all my mail, sure I do. And I certainly read all my important mail."

Conti said he considers mail from the US Air Force important.

Members of People for a Socially Responsible University claimed this week that Defense Department-financed research at UMass on Knowledge Based Systems is connected to Project Forecast II.

The group staged six separate buiding takeovers last semester to protest Defense Department-financed research at UMass.

Knowledge Based Systems are a form of artificial intelligence used to transfer facts and rules to computers with decision-making capabilities. They are also one aspect of the research being conducted under Project Forecast II.

UMass Civil Engineering Professor Clive Dym, who heads the KBS research he is now conducting with UMass graduate students, said his work is not related to or designed for Project Forecast II.

Dear Dr Conti

I wrote you last summer--as we kicked off Project FORECAST II--requesting your assistance in generating ideas for high-leverage or emerging technologies and systems concepts which would allow major improvements in the future Air Force's warfighting capabilities. The response was more than rewarding. The toughest job our FORECAST team faced was in selecting from the more than 2000 very fine inputs.

We have identified 70 ideas for further investigation and maturation--they are split roughly half and half between technologies and systems concepts. I have attached a list of those 70 ideas, and a copy of our Executive Summary which outlines some of the more exciting initiatives. We need your help to insure that the identified ideas receive the proper attention.

Our implementation activities include major "spread-the-word" efforts--through government and industry conferences, through the trade and public media, and through individual contacts. We are refocusing a significant portion of our technology and planning funding to support the initiatives. A complete report will be published this summer and the project managers, Brigadier Generals Eric Nelson and Charlie Stebbins, are always available to explain the study and its output.

I thank you for your assistance, and know that you will continue to help in maintaining the Air Force's technological edge.

Sincerely

Sylvan residents angered over new lounge policy

By DAVID FORRESTER
Collegian Correspondent

Residents in the Sylvan Residential Area expressed outrage this week over a new policy which designates suite lounge areas as public space.

When students returned to the three residence halls which constitute the Sylvan area this fall, they were informed that the lounges in their suites were open for public use.

In Sylvan, residents live in small "apartments" which include a bathroom, a lounge and several bedrooms.

Several residents complained this week that the new policy is a departure from earlier policies which said the lounges were "semi-private."

Residence directors and an area coordinator refused to comment on the issue this week. Calls to Joseph Zannini, executive director of Housing Services were not returned yesterday.

Craig Hartman, co-president of the Sylvan Area Government with Robert Higson, said the "public space" definition is not a new policy but a "new interpretation" of past policies.

In previous years, housing officials defined residence hall lounges as "not public and not private," Hartman said. Sylvan is never treated as a special case even though it is the only residential area with suites, he said.

Higson said: "If the suite lounge is public space anyone can go in it whether they live there or not."

Section IV of the Residence Hall Manual states: "It is University policy that students care for their rooms and the furnishings in those rooms. The student is responsible for damage to the room assigned and the furnishings therein."

Hartman asked, "Who is responsible for suite furniture? What if it gets damaged or stolen?"

Since the lounges are considered public, Higson said, they are not students' assigned rooms. Therefore, he said, students should not be responsible for the suite lounges.

The pair said they intend to fight the policy through channels like the Residential Committee. But, they added, civil disobedience tactics, such as sit-ins, may be implemented if all other efforts fail.

"I think we have a good case against [the policy]" Hartman said.

Higson said: "We aren't asking for the world. We're asking for our privacy back."

But, he added, "Nothing we [the area government] say seems to have a whole heck of a lot of importance to the admnistration."

Man harasses staff

University of Massachusetts Police are investigating a report of a man repeatedly harassing students in the Off-Campus Housing Office.

A representative from the office reported to police Tuesday that the man has been disrupting office business on a daily basis.

A student employee in the office, Liz Anthony, said the man is in the office between three and four times a week looking for people to live in his house.

"He basically harrasses people and tells them, 'Live in my house,'" Anthony said. "He wasn't using the office the way it is supposed to be used."

The man is looking for people to share a house he rented in Belchertown. He has been seen around campus carrying a sign advertising the property.

Senate grants loan to SciFi Conventioneers

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted unanimously last night to grant a $3,000 loan to the Science Fiction Conventioneers of UMass (SCUM) to finance the group's annual October convention.

Disagreements over whether to grant the loan dominated the student senate meeting for nearly two hours.

The senate initially voted to lend SCUM $2,000 to reserve two floors in the Campus Center, but balked on the remaining $1,000 request.

Some senators said SCUM and the Student Government Association Finance Committee had not sufficiently clarified what the money will be used for.

"It wasn't clear what the additional $1,000 was for," said Senate Speaker John Dunlap.

Upon the arrival of two SCUM members, Commuter Area Government President Clarinda Rose-Turner resubmitted the request for the full $3,000.

After SCUM member Anne Livermore explained that the money was essential to the convention's operation costs and agreed on terms for the loan, the motion lending the full $3,000 passed unanimously.

"As the Finance Committee grows healthier, we won't see this problem anymore," Dunlap said of the lengthy debate over the issue.

In other business:

- Five different motions by Student Attorney-General Robert Fadel also passed unanimously. One of the motions restructures the SGA Judicial Affairs Committee, dropping two advocates from the committee and replacing them with five elected senators.

"Anybody can say they're an advocate," said Fadel. "The committee's been inoperative. [The restructuring] makes it immediately operable."

Another of Fadel's motions makes it possible for one student to order the SGA to review its constitution. The previous rule required a petition by 25 students to set a review in motion.

- A motion sponsored by Fadel and Budgets Committee Chairman Karen Talbot which limits publicly-elected SGA positions to a $3.75 per hour stipend was tabled for two weeks.

"We want to expand the motion and deal with more issues," said Fadel.

- Another motion that was tabled for two weeks concerned a proposal to hire an auditor to prevent possible instances of fraud in the SGA payroll accounts. The motion was sponsored by SGA Rents and Fees Co-chairperson Paul DelGallo.

DelGallo said the motion was tabled so the SGA can overcome constitutional barriers preventing them from examining area government paychecks.

Summit to focus of education on importance

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said a national summit on education called by President Bush and scheduled for next week is expected to focus on primary and secondary education because those are the most serious problems in this country.

Duffey, who was chosen to brief the nation's governors on higher education this week in Washington, DC, said the nation will focus on the lower grade levels because the first four years of a child's education are the most important.

He said Massachusetts has "historically been good on education" for children in these age levels.

"For the privileged [people], Massachusetts has been good," Duffey said. "But for poorer people, we've been not much better than anywhere else."

Duffey said the state's education system has been living off past investments and not preparing for the future. He added that public higher education has become more of an individual responsibility.

"An investment in education is the most important investment anyone can make," Duffey said. "It's more important than buying a car."

The summit, which has been arranged by President Bush, has produced a range of expectations from the governors, Duffey said.

He said some governors felt Bush's actions show promise of an increased commitment to education at the national level.

But, he added, others are still skeptical that education is becoming a high national priority.

Duffey said some governors have taken the lead in advocating education, citing Gov. Lamarr of Tennesee and Gov. Kean of New Jersey as examples.

"They've truly been education governors," Duffey said.

Attention will be paid to Headstart Benefits, he said, adding that 25 percent of children who are eligible for the benefits do not receive them.

He said the summit will also focus on the dropout rate, with an attempt to reduce it by 30 percent over the next four years.

Two women report spotting flasher twice on University campus

Two women reported to police Tuesday that, in two separate incidents, a man exposed himself to them while they were walking on campus.

One incident occurred at 2:20 p.m. near Worcester Dining Commons and the other at 2:40 p.m. in Lot 49, police said. Police are investigating the reports.

In other police reports:

- Two vehicles collided on Massachusetts Avenue Tuesday, resulting in $600 total damage, police said.

Police said the driver of the vehicle traveling north failed to stop at a red light and collided with a vehicle heading east. The driver of the car traveling north was cited for failing to stop at a red light, police said.

- A computer was reported stolen from a car parked in the second level of the Campus Center Parking Garage Tuesday, police said. Police said a window in the car was smashed. Damage was estimated at $3,100.

BOG to decide on office space for four student organizations

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

After more than a week of deliberations, the Board of Governors is expected to decide tonight whether to relocate three Registered Student Organizations and to grant additonal studio space to a fourth.

According to BOG Vice President Liz Hart, the board is considering a proposal to move the Greek Area Government to room 407 in the Student Union building, which formerly housed the Student Government Association treasurer's office.

The University of Massachusetts branch of the human rights organization, Amnesty International, and the literary magazine, Spectrum, are also slated to move to room 406E Student Union, formerly the office shared by the SGA president and the student trustee, Hart said.

WMUA, the campus radio station, is also slated to receive extra office space in Campus Center room 103, which is currently occupied by Spectrum.

The Office of Third World Affairs (OTWA) and the Third World Caucus were originally scheduled to relocate, but Hart said these plans have been stalled.

Sherwood Thompson, OTWA director, said yesterday that room 407 in the Student Union building, which was origninally allocated to OTWA, is too small to meet the office's needs. (See related story, this page.)

Hart said she did not know when the groups will be moved. "I hope the situation will be resolved within 30 days," she said.

In other business:

- Applications are still being accepted for BOG coordinator and assistant coordinator positions, Hart said.

OTWA relocation on hold

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

The planned relocation of the Office of Third World Affairs to room 407 in the Student Union building has been stalled because the latter room has inadequate space to serve the office's needs, the Board of Governors announced yesterday.

Liz Hart, vice president of the Board of Governors, said the BOG's space committee is now investigating other possible offices for OTWA.

Sherwood Thompson, OTWA director, said the room, which formerly housed the Student Government Association treasurer's office, is too small for OTWA's various services, which include workshops and counseling students.

"Look at this office," he said. "There is no confidential space for me to advise students."

Thompson said the move is expected to require about $3,000 in advertising and new brochures to promote the new office. He added that such advertising is very difficult to implement at the beginning of the semester.

"It would be better to do it during intersession or the summer," he said.

Hart said other proposed moves including Spectrum, the campus literary magazine, the Greek Area Government and Amnesty International, a human rights organization, will not be affected by this change.

"It's a very positive solution for everybody," Hart said. "The Greeks will have space to plan activities as will Amnesty International, Spectrum will have more visibility on the fourth floor balcony and WMUA will have more office space."

BOG Executive Board member Sue Gordon agreed, saying the renovations in the SGA office have helped open office space to groups such as Amnesty International.

Student protests in China incorporated into teachings by professors around nation

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Many professors of political science, history and sociology around the country have already incorporated the events of student protests in China last summer into courses and seminars, with the hope that a thorough perspective on the protest may help spur change.

Some are already teaching the lessons of Tiananmen Square this fall, others are planning to wait until spring to review the already 'rich literature" spawned by the protests. At the same time, student interest in such courses have sharply increased.

"Five or six years after our students graduate, many of them are in positions to make a difference," said Andrew Walder, a professor of sociology at Harvard University, who usually teaches a graduate seminar focusing on post-1949 events in China but plans this year to examine the years just since 1979.

Gordon Bennett, a professor of government at the University of Texas, Austin, said the student demonstrations that occurred in June in Tiananmen Square in Beijing will form the centerpiece of the survey of Chinese politics that he plans to teach next spring.

"It relates to every thesis of political change in China," said Bennett, "that is, whether Chinese authoritarianism was capable of significant economic reform while suppressing political change or alternatively, whether the decade of economic reform in China was forced."

Roderick MacFarquhar, professor of government at Harvard, plans to teach a seminar in Chinese elite politics to juniors this semester and said that the June protests will occupy at least one week of the course.

MacFarquhar said he heard from colleagues from Beijing University when he taught a course on the Cultural Revolution several years ago that Chinese officials "wondered why someone at Harvard was apprised of professors at American univer-

Construction funds for schools tight

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday a $15 million limit on school construction projects will have to stand unless alternative sources of money are found.

But Dukakis said he is willing to work with the state Education Board, which rejected his request Tuesday to hold down spending to that limit because of the state budget crunch. The authorized school construction spending level is $31.8 million.

State Education commissioner Harold Raynolds said Tuesday the vote was not an outright defiance of the governor since alternative sources of money can be found, and Dukakis agreed.

"They expressed their displeasure and I share their displeasure," Dukakis said.

He said he was willing to work with the board on a plan to shift some money from local school operating aid into construction.

But Dukakis said unless money is shifted, there aren't any more dollars to spend.

Judges to be harder on violent criminals

BOSTON (AP) — Judges who let violent criminals off without jail sentences would have to explain their rulings in writing under a bill filed yesterday by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The governor, who also signed legislation increasing aid to victims of violent crimes, acknowledged that the measure would probably lead to more crowded prisons, but he said he is already committed to a policy of expanding prison space.

"If a judge is not going to sentence someone to prison for a crime of violence, he should have very good reasons — reasons that will hold up to public scrutiny," Dukakis said. "Were going to expect judges in this state to be accountable."

Dukakis had no comment on a recent decision by Superior court Judge Cortland A. Mathers to dismiss weapons charges against alleged Boston gang members. Mathers, who was a Dukakis appointee, based his ruling on what he viewed as illegal searches while community leaders have criticized the ruling as overly lenient.

sities teaching about Tiananmen Square "but since they are antagonistic, the reaction at the official, level will be negative."

Thomas Gold, associate professor of sociology and vice-chairman of the Center for Chinese Studies at the Unversity of California, Berkely, said the number of students enrolled in his undergraudate course on contemporary Chinese society has doubled since he last offered it two years ago.'

More than 120 students have signed up for this year's course, compared with only 60 two years ago, Gold said yesterday.

But while Gold expects that the student protests will dominate the course, he said that the events in Tiananmen Square underscored a truth about Chinese government and society he said has existed for centuries.

"It's a dichotomy, between a tightening up and a loosening, that goes back thousands of years," said Gold.

Gold said the Chinese use the word "shou" to signify restriction or a clamping down, contrasted with "fang," the Chinese word that means 'to liberalize."

"What we've seen over the past 10 years is a trend toward fang," said Gold. "But Tiananmen Square meant a temporary victory for those people who want to clamp down. What happened in Tiananmen Square has happened many times. Part of the tragedy is how little is new."

Gold said the events in Beijing "caught the imagination" of American students.

"It brought to the surface a lot of latent feelings about Americans that we don't always express." he said. "It brought out our respect for human rights and democracy that most people don't think of very often.

ON THEIR WAY — Vietnamese soldiers wave from their truck yesterday as the leave Siem Reap in Cambodia, part of a withdrawal of all Vietnamese forces which will be completed Sept. 26.

Officials suspect plane crash was caused by bomb

PARIS (AP) - A bomb most likely caused the crash of a French DC-10 jetliner that exploded in the sky over a desolate stretch of northern Africa, killing all 171 people on board, the airline said today.

The French airline UTA also said it received an anonymous call from a man claiming responsibility for the crash on behalf of the Moslem terrorist group Islamic Jihad. The airline said it was not in a position to judge its authenticity and informed the French Foreign Ministry.

Later today, an unidentified man telephoned a Western news agency in London and read a statement in English said to be from Islamic Jihad. The statement linked the crash to Isreal's capture of a Shiite Moslem cleric, Sheik Abdul-Karim Obeid, in southern Lebanon on July 28.

"In the name of Allah and Imam Khomenhi, the Islamic Jihad issued this statement: We are proud of this action which was very successful. We would like to say the French are warned not to exchange information regarding the Sheik Obeid with the Isrealis no more. We demand the freedom of Sheik Obeid and otherwise we will refresh the memories of the bombings in Paris of '85 and '86. Long live the Islamic Republic of Iran," he said.

The wreckage of the aircraft was found today scattered widely across the rocky, sandy, and remote section of south-central Niger.

French army soldiers stationed in neighboring Chad were the first to reach the crash site. They said all 15 crew members and 156 passengers, including eight children, died in the crash.

Students resent cut in library hours

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Correspondent

Students at the University of Massachusetts are resentful of the reduction of library hours by at least one hour this semester, claiming this result of state budget cutbacks is blocking access to education.

Laura Silver, a communications major said, "A lot of people are already paying a lot to come here. All this means is we end by paying in a different way: our ability to do research is being stifled."

According to Betty Brace, library circulation director, the change in library hours occurred because the libraries are currently short-staffed.

Full-time staff has now been cut and filled with part-time staff, she said, adding that a hiring freeze designed to conserve University funds is blocking efforts to fill vacant positions, she added.

"The staff in our own department is down by 20 percent, in comparison to two years ago," she said.

This occurs in part from a cut in hours for student employees, who were mainly responsible for shelving material and compiling statistics, Brace said.

Shutting the doors an hour earlier five days a week saves the library from paying six employees for 30 hours of working time, Brace said.

Brace said she has not received complaints from students about the time reduction, which is especially great on Fridays.

Full-time employee Richard Daggett reported that there has been no drastic change in Friday traffic through the Main Library.

During other days of the week, however, student traffic in the Main Library has increased considerably, Brace said.

She attributed this increase to the transfer of reserve material from Goodell Library to third floor in the Main Library. The transfer, which occurred this semester, resulted mainly because of from larger campus priorities and the perceiving of available space in the Tower by Administration.

Conti said he does not know of any professors at UMass doing research for Project Forecast II but added that many professors, at UMass and all over the country, run KBS projects which are unclassified.

"I don't know what they [PSRU] are talking about," Conti said. "I have no relationship with Project Forecast II, or whatever the hell it's called or that General [Skantze].

"They [PSRU] are just drawing connections," Conti said. "That's like saying if I got a letter from a Communist or Fascist group, then I'm a Communist or a Fascist."

Jonathan Leavitt, a PSRU member, said the group has been investigatng DOD-financed research on campus for several months.

"It took a lot of hard work and a little luck to uncover this," he said. "Hopefully, Conti will be the first in a list of University administrators that are exposed for working for the Department of Defense."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

We need the Escort Service

Cutting the budget for the University of Massachusetts Escort Service is inexcusable.

In spite of debilitating budget cuts, we find no reason to chop a service so important to the safety of thousands of students each year.

Why don't we cut a small percentage of the salaries of all the campus administrators to make up the difference?

Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who refused a pay raise several months ago in light of earlier budget cuts, can afford to take a $1,000 cut, as can several other administrators earning more than $70,000 per year.

Unfortunately, the most likely way UMass will wake up to the necessity of the service may be only after an assault or worse, rape.

We hope those deciding what programs get cut will reverse this cut before a tragedy occurs.

A remarkable individual

While sitting in your dorm room, in the library or in class, our thoughts wander. You might be thinking of what you are going to eat, your plans for that evening or you could be stressing-out because of all the work you have. Typical thoughts of a college student.

Minu Sebastian

We are so engrossed in our day to day life that it is easy to forget that there is a world beyond our campus. How many times have we thought of world issues such as oppression, human rights and famine? I know that I do not think of such things on a daily basis. But there are people that do.

On Monday, night I heard Elie Wiesel speak in the Fine Arts Center. When I first decided to go to see him I was not sure what to expect. I knew that he had won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1986 and that he was a survivor of the Holocaust. I was expecting to hear stories about his experience in the Holocaust.

During his speech he mentioned his internment in a Nazi concentration camp but that was hardly his focus. Instead he talked of unity, awareness and respect between races, religions and cultures. He spoke of achieving unity by focusing on the similarities of people rather than the differences. Being aware of the various beliefs and practices of people can help to better understand each other, and by understanding each other we can achieve unity. With unity, we can eliminate misunderstandings and misconceptions that often lead to violence.

He spoke of being awake and aware of the events around us. He mentioned apartheid in South Africa. He said it saddened him to see such oppression in existence. We should not close our eyes to what is happening, he said. We must do what we can to help their cause.

We must respect one another. We are all equals. People of one religion are not better than those of another. People of one race are not superior to another. Until these basic concepts can be instilled into us, we will not have the dignity or ability to accept ourselves or others.

I am inspired by Elie Wiesel. He has dedicated his life to educating people and spreading his wisdom. He is currently a professor of Religious Studies and Philosophy at Boston University.

He has been acknowledged for his efforts and achievements. He is a recipient of the Human Rights Law Award, Humanitarian Award of the International League of Human Rights, and the Martin Luther King Medallion, just to name a few. He is also the author of 32 books, one of which is Night, his best selling novel, where he tells of his family's internment in Nazi concentration camps.

I was especially impressed to hear him speak of people as being one and focusing attention on oppression throughout the world. He did not indulge in stories of his past, but instead talked of present situations. He spoke of what we should do now to end all evils. His speech was relevant to people of all religions, cultures and races.

It is inspiring to know that there are people who care about the world and the well being of the human race as a whole.

It is refreshing to know that there are people who can see beyond their own small world and way of life.

Elie Wiesel is one of these people.

My ticket to evocation

I had my first brush with the law the other day — almost.

You could say it was my own fault, a result of total stupidity. But judging from the buzzings I've heard around campus, a lot of people make the same mistake.

Jim Clark

I forgot to pay my parking tickets.

It was an honest error. I'd walk out to my car to find that I've been ticketed, take the thing off my windshield and toss it on the floor.

Somehow, when I cleaned my car a couple of months later, I failed to notice them and threw them out.

Let me first clarify my position on parking on this campus. The system is set up pretty fairly. You buy a sticker for your car and you have expressed written consent to park somewhere in that lot whenever you want. Sounds OK to me.

But there are always people who get a little too much sleep and get onto campus about 2.3 seconds before their class starts. They grab the nearest available spot of vacant pavement and hurry off to Econ 103, or History 151 or whatever.

Inevitably, while they are gone the guys in the brown uniforms will strike. Sometimes (and this is what gets me a lot) it will happen within mere moments of your return. But it happens.

Now it's my own fault for trying to jeopardize someone else's parking spot next to Boyden, I deserve to get nailed. What I hate are people who are just too darn lazy to mind, parking in handicap spots, on the lawn, or wherever they can find a place. These are probably the same people who take the bus to Orchard Hill.

Last year I had an E lot sticker, and this year I was "promoted" to Lot 25.

But did you realize that both Lot 25 and E lot (the one right behind it) are actually in Hadley? That's right. I go to UMass-Amherst and I have to park in another town. Still, no excuse.

I know of people who pile up literally hundreds of parking tickets, and never think twice about it. There was a rumor floating about last year that if you didn't pay your tickets, the school would withhold your diploma. I'm not sure if that's true, but in the infinite wisdom of a friend of mine, upon receiving the umpteenth ticket in one week, asked, "What are they going to do, take away my birthday?"

No . . . but they will take away your license. Or your registration. Or both.

You see, all these arms of the law are like one big happy family. The police, the registry, insurance companies, all feed off one another. Admittedly, I didn't realize that I could lose my license. And I wondered how many clueless people with hundreds of fines to their discredit may be driving around on a license that was revoked two years ago.

They finally caught up to me. Sometime just before coming back to school, I got a letter saying that I had three tickets that were way overdue. And the fines had increased. Chapter 90, Section 20A of the Massachusetts General Laws state that if any ticket is not paid or appealed within 21 days, the fine can be increased.

The letter also gave me notice that the fines had to be paid by Sept. 19 (Tuesday) or that I'd have to go to a hearing before the appeals officer. Naturally I stuffed the letter away and forgot about it. Until Monday night.

By then it was too late to do anything about it. So I figured I'd have to go to this hearing and find out what my imminent fate was. I began to prepare a defense. I wondered if I could dismiss my case and bring it before Judge Wapner. What to do?

Turns out, I didn't have to worry. I arrived Tuesday morning, checkbook in hand, and paid my fines. And that was that. No lecture, no reprimand, nothing. I was lucky.

I can only think of those poor ignorant souls who choose to ignore their parking tickets. Someday, they will get pulled over for some routine thing like a headlight out, or something petty like that. And when they find out they've been driving without a license . . . boy, will they be surprised.

Senseless violence transcending the time gap

The other day, I remembered an instance from my past that got me thinking. I recalled sitting in the back of my parents' '74 LTD as we drove down Washington Street in Somerville, en route to a typical middle class day trip to not-so-sunny Revere Beach.

My father was telling a story about a run down, boarded up building which was located across from the Somerville Holiday Inn. Apparently, the building at one time housed a bar that he and his army buddies occasionally stopped at to tip a few.

Amidst the foggy details was one vivid memory. The bartender had shut off a rather unruly patron, and subsequently asked him to leave. Not to be outdone, the man produced a pistol and shot the bartender through the heart. It wasn't long before the place was closed down.

Keep in mind that this incident took place in 1951. To young Cos, a third grader, the '50s meant Leave It To Beaver, Father Knows Best and funny looking baseball cards that costed much more than my one dollar allowance could cover. "Did people really commit crimes like that back then?" I asked my father.

"People were just as mad then as they are today," he said. I've yet to forget that statement.

- Last Thursday, Joseph T. Wesbecher walked into the Standard-Gravure printing company in Louisville, Kentucky, randomly shot eight people to death, and wounded another 13. Wesbecher had been on disability leave, and had a history of psychological problems. His doctors had apparently changed his medication the day before.

Cosmo Macero Jr.

- Over the past two years, Joan Heaton, 39, her two daughters, Jennifer, 10, and Melissa, 8 and their neighbor Rebecca Spencer, 27, all of Warwick, Rhode Island, have been brutally stabbed to death in their own homes. Craig Price, a 14-year-old varsity letter winner at Warwick Veterans Memorial High School, was arrested three days ago in connection with the killings.

The husky, 240 pound teen is a talented lineman, blessed with the natural strength that he used to snap the bones of the Heaton family as they struggled to hang on to their lives.

- In McKee, Kentucky, Monday, Brian Price, a 17-year-old straight A student took 11 of his classmates hostage as he attempted to act out the plot of a popular Stephen King novel. During the course of the eight hour ordeal, Price requested cigarettes, soda and other assorted foodstuffs in exchange for the hostages, the last of which were released at about 5:30 p.m.

Well dad, from the looks of things now, people seem to be a lot angrier than ever. Whether or not AK-47 assault rifles are banned in the United States should not be an issue. We certainly shouldn't have to ban them. But it has become a pressing concern.

Look at things from this perspective: It's terribly easy to kill your fellow man. There are no physical restraints, just moral, and (whether it makes a difference or not) legal ones. There's a concept we must re-examine here: it's called being civilized, and people today are no more civil than they used to be.

Notes from the basement

The informative fact of the week is for Northampton residents.

The best cup of coffee can be found at the Normand, across from Fitzwilly's (which has a great brunch menu). This is even better than Trenducci's, because there aren't any people hanging around to be seen wearing black, with other people who want to be seen wearing black, in an "untrendy" spot.

Unsolicited plug — an old social club is getting active again. It is called Sigma Gamma Alpha (SGA) and it meets every Wednesday night. Just by joining you can have a hundred instant friends, and numerous enemies just add some debate and/or filibustering. Get involved, their offices are on the 4th floor of the Student Union.

Peter Leon

The irrelevant Residential Education department has taken further steps to Stalinize the dorms.

The Resident Assistants, who are for the most part victims themselves, are now being forced to be patrol officers. They demand I.D.'s from people, prevent people from instantly responding to mother nature's call.

The days of an R.A. being a counselor and resource person are over.

Big Brother has invaded the dorms, and now dormsoc equals happiness, rights equal unhappines, freedom after all is a burden.

Thus this week's quote: Power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely. — Lord Acton.

The truth being, a friend of mine who is an R.A. told me that another R.A. wrote a woman up because the woman was on a balcony with a glass of water. The R.A.s have been told that no open containers are allowed, because it is possible that there is alcohol in the container.

Hey, ever hear of thought police?!

Sorry to inform the schmuckle — pooh R.A.s who are enforcing this rule but you better stop. This is no less than a violation of the Constitution. People are innocent until proven guilty.

An R.A. is no judge, certainly not a jury, and has not the power to be executioner.

I laud the R.A.s who are ignoring the idiots above them and acting like people who care. More power to you!

There is a lot of discussion about whether the Defense Department should fund research on campus.

First I am opposed to some of it, especially chemical weapons research. But as to artificial intelligence research, even if it is intended to aid soldiers, the knowledge gained will help many other fields and people.

The space program has proven, over and over, that the medical research done there is invaluable to us now.

Second, I saw a poster for the rally on Wednesday which was intended to look like an equation. It was something like this: DOD ⁵ TAL plus BC plus LAC etc. ad nauseam. Two points: A) I do specifically remember that they didn't identify one of these neat little acronyms, which were intended to show that DOD equals budget cuts, but instead made the whole point unclear; and B) If they really believe DOD funding takes money out of our budget, they are just plain stupid.

The DOD could always redirect those funds to another university, project or whatever. These funds in no way are promised or likely to be redirected by Congress and the president toward education.

Is this a fundamental problem with our society? Yes. Is it going to change? Not for a long time.

Thus 'till next week, UMass, take some time to think.

Welcome to your new job!

"Okay, come right in, don't be nervous, but make a good impression. State your name please."

"Uhh. . .John . . .John Doe."

"Okay, from now on I will be calling you "4577894." Let's see Mr. 45 ETC., you have an interesting resume here. It says that in your previous job you were involved in everything. Hmm. . .would you be willing if hired to totally erase all your past accomplishments and start over from scratch?"

Josh Galitsky

"Nobody ever told me we had to . . . "

"I'm going to ask you several personal questions Mr. 45 ETC. Please be honest but don't let me see you sweat. Do you drink coffee?"

"Yes."

"Excellent. You will need to drink heavily your first two years."

"No."

"This is not good 45. I suggest you start. You'll have hundreds of late night projects to do for the company that most certainly will interfere with your free time and overall health. You'll need a caffeine-induced buzz to keep up the good work. Do you mind sharing an office with someone?"

"Does he smoke?"

"He might also do drugs, own a handgun, or worship Satan. Every year we hire less employees because we lose money each year. If you are hired, it still isn't guaranteed that you will do the job you want to."

"Is the work difficult?"

"Oh of course it is. Our expectations of you are ridiculous and our policies are as stiff as we are. We rarely listen to your grievances but if you're not pulling your weight we'll give you plenty of attention."

"Are there any benefits?"

"Oh of course. We have an excellent health plan. We have programs for when you become physically ill or psychologically stressed. In fact I would suggest that you make both appointments now in case we do hire you."

"Perhaps this job isn't such a good idea after all."

"Oh come now Mr. 45, you really don't have too many other options do you? You can get beaten up in the military or go work for your dad at his vegetable stand. Be strong. Neurosis builds character."

"Isn't there anything positive about the experience?"

"Oh certainly. I'll admit that the pay is bad, the life is fast-paced, and the skills gained are the most basic survival techniques but there are some fun moments. We have company parties every weekend. You can spend the next four years with the company ragging on the management of all us 'top brass.'"

"And you are an equal opportunity employer?"

"Yes, we are, even though we hire much less minorities. Anyway Mr. 45 ETC., we are out of time. Please make your life decision immediately."

"Yes, I want to be with your company because I have no other options."

"Good. Do you have the thousands of dollars we asked you to turn in with your application?"

"Yes, here is my BayBank password. I managed to beg on the streets and I got a loan from a guy named Vito."

"Excellent. Well then you're hired."

"What do I do now?"

"Welcome to the University. You're on your own now, Mr. 5813 ETC. wasn't it?"

"But. . ."

"Next please!"

Counseling Collective for everyone

First I would like to thank you for taking the time to print a small, informative article on the UMass Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Men's Counseling Collective ("Lesbian, Bisexual Gay Forum", Sept. 14). It is great that we are finally getting some press coverage. Unfortunately, the reporter seemed to have misunderstood some vital facts, mainly that the counseling collective is open to and serves people of both genders.

I stated in a telephone interview as an example, the situation of a man coming into our office and feeling comfortable. The reporter must have thought that this meant the Counseling Collective Office is only for men who are dealing with problems or questions of sexual orientation, because he repeatedly stated that the Counseling Collective was a great resource for men. Clearly, by the name of our organization, the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Men's Counseling Collective, we are a valuable resource for both men and women who might have questions or problems that have to do with sexual orientation.

It was just a small misunderstanding that I wanted to clear up. The Counseling Collective is for anyone whether gay,lesbian, bisexual, heterosexual, or questioning their sexual orientation.

Brad Robinson
UMass Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Men's Counseling Collective

Blatant racism, or just an opinion?

After an all too brief lull in racist depictions of Arabs and Muslims, the Collegian has once again resumed its campaign of hate.

This time the editor-in-chief, David R. Mark, has hurt and enraged Palestinians as well as other Arab, Muslim and Third World peoples by his entirely unnecessary comments in his editorial ("I came, I saw and got stoned in the West Bank," Sept. 19).

Mark is certainly entitled to his political opinions on the Israel-Palestine conflict. However, his deep-rooted racist bias seeps through the editorial and is devoid of any pretenses in the following statement, "The UN is supposed to be a neutral organization. In fact, the UN representatives we met were sickenly (sic.) pro-Palestinian."

Shame on you, Mr. Mark. You could have used the words "The UN representatives were heavily biased towards Palestinians," or "overly influenced by pro-Palestinian sentiment." You were unable to hide the sentiments that you harbor.

To be Palestinian is not a disease. To support the Palestinians is not a sickness.

Think how you would feel if a pro-Palestinian group stooped to such levels, and printed an article in the Collegian labelling supporters of Israel as "sickeningly pro-Jewish." We have endured in silence the battery of caricatures of Arabs that were selected by the editors of the Collegian, week after week. We have tolerated the images of unshaven, hook-nosed, fanatic Arabs and Muslims gunning down innocent children.

We can take it no longer.

As usual, the anguish of non-Whites will go unheeded by the administration and the SGA. We call on all concerned Whites, especially those in the Jewish community, to join us in urging the Collegian to remove this racist editor-in-chief and print an apology for the specific remarks.

With Civility Week around the corner, this is a chance to engage in more than just rhetoric, especially considering the grim irony that the same Mr. Mark has an appeal for a Multi-Cultural Affairs page on the flip side of his racist diatribe.

Eyad Keshawi
Mahmoud Said

(Editor's Note: 14 other people signed this letter.)

Disappointed with Mark's editorial

We are very disappointed by the tact of the Collegian this semester. Specifically, we are overwhelmed with the insensitivity and reactionary arrogance that characterizes, in both word and deed, your new editor-in-chief, David R. Mark.

In regard to Mark's recent column ("I came, I saw and got stoned in the West Bank," Sept. 19), how dare he write that the plight of the Palestinian people is "undeserving of the world attention it has received"?

How could gross and blatant violations of a people's human rights ever be undeserving of the world's attention? Mark also insists that United Nations representatives on the West Bank are "sickeningly pro-Palestinian," and that they, in citing murderous human rights violations by Israeli soldiers, are making "useless rhetoric." How dare he?

Why is Mark, a White male, the sole writer of the Collegian's first Multicultural Affairs page? And if there are no articles or writers from a "multicultural background," whose fault is that?

The words and deeds of David R. Mark smack of bigotry and racism. The Southwest race-riot was not that long ago, and the University of Massachusetts is still grappling with an atmosphere of racial tension that puts us all to shame. As the herald of this university and as the "largest college daily New England," the Massachusetts Daily Collegian has an obligation to function as a cornerstone of social responsibility for the University as well as for the entire Five College Community.

In the spirit of profound concern for the well-being of our community, we, the undersigned University students, call for David R. Mark's immediate resignation.

In support of free art expression

Meredith O'Brien brings to light some very important issues in her editorial ("First Amendment 'trash,' " Sept. 19) on regulating federal funding for art forms that certain lawmakers feel is offensive.

I, too, share her repugnance at the idea.

These are lawmakers, not art critics. Well, not good ones anyway. To tell you the truth though, the art world has brought this on itself.

During the depression years, feeling that normal patronage of the arts had diminished, the federal government began funding the arts with huge grants.

These grants became the first moment the arts really came into danger, because the artists compromised themselves, giving into the lure of big government spending.

Basically, that which should be the most pure of endeavors, creating art simply for its beauty or ability to move people, became a government program.

All government programs are subject to the whim of the legislatures. Art sold itself to the big money of government, and now they are calling the bill due.

You see, I feel artists should create their work, and if it is good work, inspiring or thought provoking, people will pay to see it.

I am very partial to some of the neo-classical paintings that are on view in Boston right now, and I have paid what I could afford to see them. No government subsidy. No congressman deciding what is "good" or "bad" art. Just me and the paintings.

If everyone in the art world is as upset as I am that you are being regulated — the ball is in your court.

Show some integrity — walk away from the federal government.

They have to leave your art alone as long as you leave their wallets alone.

Woza Albert shows us South Africa 1989

By LINDA SPIERS
Collegian Correspondent

A scene from Woza Albert

When Andrew Lloyd-Webber's Starlight Express was previewed in the London quality press, the critics talked excitedly about the sets, costumes, special effects, and the technical work. There was very little, if any, discussion about plot.

Compare Lloyd-Webber and his millions, his casts of thousands and his comfortable, dull audiences with a group of people who have so little that they cannot count amongst their possessions the right to meet together. And because of this they have no scenery, LX or FX board or color filters. Their audiences are thinking hard about their position as virtual slaves; unable to take any jobs except labouring or service, unable to receive a decent education. They think about purple dye, bullwhips and guns, a man imprisioned without trial for over 20 years, and others dead in police rooms. They think about their cultures, their traditions and their heritage. This audience is the majority of the country.

Orwellian? Yes, but this is not a novel, this is the here and now—South Africa, 1989. Out of this hideous set of circumstances and overwhelming odds has come South African township theater, political, performed without any technical aids, without even a stage to mark its presence — so it can be viewed by those who are "banned" from joining their fellows—from over walls into other people's back yards and other incongruous theatrical locations. How this genre has risen to international critical acclaim, an excited acting fraternity and entranced audiences puts us back in the realm of the novel.

The here is UMass, and the now is September 22-23 1989. Crossroads Theater Company in collaboration with the New World Theater Company presents Woza

Brides give satisfaction for all who can't roll with the Stones

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

You can't always get what you want, like Rolling Stones tickets, but if you run like wild horses over to Katina's on Sunday night, you'll at least be able to get some satisfaction.

The Blushing Brides, the definitive Rolling Stones clone band, has been around for ten years now, longer than most original bands. The band traces its beginnings back to 1976 when Paul Martin, the lead guitarist and "Keith Richards" of the band, saw a Stones clone band, Hot Rocks, in Canada. Martin, a "silent Stones fanatic," was in a band at the time, but liked the clone idea. Three years later, he met Maurice Raymond, also a Stones fan, and the band was formed with Raymond handling the "Mick Jagger" chores.

Like their mentors, the Brides have gone through many personnel changes throughout the years. Their current lineup includes Martin, Raymond, Pierre Major as rhythm guitarist Ron Wood, Vic Caffif as bassist Bill Wyman (although Caffif is not married to a teeenager), and Jack Fuller as drummer Charlie Watts.

Martin, who has seen the Stones seven times in concert, has never met them. "They know who we are and we know who they are, but nobody's actually shaken hands yet," Martin said. "But we've sold a few albums for them, so I'm sure they're not complaining.

I once read where some reporter asked Mick once if he'd ever seen us and he said, 'Why would I want to see myself?' So he knows we're out there."

The Brides cover the long history of the Stones as thoroughly as possible in concert. They are currently learning the songs from the Stones latest, Steel Wheels album, but are not yet performing them in concert. But at an average age of 30, the Brides may have a bit more energy on stage than "the world's greatest rock and roll band." Yet that's not all that sets the Brides apart from other Stones clones.

"We have the right attitude," Martin said. "Other bands play the Stones note for note, but they just don't get the attitude."

The Brides, who are based in Toronto, Canada, actually released an album of original material, Unveiled, in 1982. "It went just short of gold in Canada, but was kind of silent in the US because we weren't really allowed to advertise it," Martin said.

But don't worry about the band playing any of their originals in concert. "We know the people want straight Stones and we're happy to play it," Martin said.

The band is currently on tour playing areas about a week before the originals get there. "We tour about seven months out of twelve," Martin said. "We literally do one night stand tours." Katina's is the last stop on their current tour.

We know the Brides sound and act like the Stones onstage, but what about off? "I don't do heroin as a hobby, if that's what you mean," Martin said. "Actually, we're all kind of health nuts. We go to the gym a lot."

Phish is phresh, Phish is phun Phish is phried, they don't smell

By DAKKAN ABBE
Collegian Correspondent

Tonight at Pearl Street in Northampton, you will be able to buy a piece of Phresh Phish.

This unique foursome from Burlington, Vermont, is quite simply the finest purveyor of psychedelic rock around. The combination of guitar, keyboards, bass and drums allows them the flexibility and range of music that they perform with brilliance and originality.

Though definitely rooted in the blues-rock of the sixties, they also borrow heavily from jazz and funk. Their lyrics are often bizzare, and they don't take themselves too seriously.

In their song "I Didn't Know," they sing, "I didn't like cheeseburger alley cats near me, or petrified fish disease/I wish somebody would hear me."

This is typical of the strange and trippy nature of their songs, but no matter how funny a song's lyrics are, the music behind it has to be strong, or nothing matters. Phish just blows your mind with tunes that you will be humming for weeks after the show.

Most Phish songs make the phrase "infectious rhythm" an understatement, and dancing like some hot-wired monkey on acid is a requirement at all Phish shows.

Understand me, this band is hot.

This is a band that jams.

They take a solo and turn it into an excuse to show off their virtuosity, and to drive the audience wild. When they really get going, everyone in the house starts screaming and dancing, turning into a mass of tangled bodies begging and aching for the band to stop for just a moment, so they can breathe and hunch over in exhaustion.

PREVIEW

Not only do Phish have a selection of awe-inspiring originals, they do covers of everything from Hendrix to Traffic to Duke Ellington. That's right, at almost any Phish show, you will hear them pull off a fantastic version of Ellington's "Take the A-Train."

Last spring, the band went into the studio and recorded a tape at their own expense, which you can buy at a few local record stores. The songs are all their own and are good, but lack that certain "Umph" you get from their live show.

There are a good number of impressive bootlegs floating around campus, but other than that, these boys are still unsigned. I predict this will not go on for long, though, and that the days of seeing Phish in a small club are numbered, so if you miss Phish tonight, you'll never know what you could have heard, but if you go, you'll have one of the best nights of your life.

Mr. Guitar Head

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Adrian Belew is more than just a brilliant guitarist.

"I love the guitar," Belew said. "It's an extension of my own voice. I couldn't give a damn how fast I am or what riffs I know, that doesn't appeal to me whatsoever. The guitar is a beautiful way for me to sound like anything. That's what I like to do most with it. I can make it sound like an animal or I can make it sound like a clarinet or I can make it sound like a guitar. So it is the ultimate orchestration tool for me. But I can't think of myself as just a guitarist, because I don't feel that's all I do."

Belew brings his guitar, and all his other talents, to Pearl Street tomorrow night.

Belew is currently riding high on the success of his latest solo album Mr. Music Head and its current single, "Oh Daddy." It is quite ironic that the simplest song he has ever written has become his biggest hit.

"['Oh Daddy'] began as a fun song about some of the questions my children ask me. They're seeing people on MTV and asking: 'When are you going to be like that, when are you going to be a big star?' It's tongue-in-cheek and yet there is a serious side to it.

The album is also filled with 60's, psychedelic, Beatles references, a time that Belew remembers fondly. He calls his song, "1967," "probably the autobiographical piece I've ever written," and describes "Hot Zoo" as "a surrealistic walk through the zoo, a la John Lennon."

Belew, who taught himself guitar, has toured with Frank Zappa, David Bowie and Talking Heads. He has also fronted the musically adventurous King Crimson, as well as the more pop sounding Bears. He has recently been opening for 10,000 Maniacs.

Belew will be going on at 6:30 p.m.

Woza Albert

Albert, a South African township play starring Fana Kekana and Tsepa Mokone.

Roberta Uno Thewell of New World Theater said with satisfaction, "This is technology-free theater — the entire play is the actor, and the level of physical performance is incredible. It's theater of content which is not propagandistic like so much political theater in the West."

Ken Johnson of Crossroads agreed, "This is theater at its purest," he said. "Their approach to theater reflects the social realities that they face. They want the truth to be heard, which is very important in a society which has yet to recognize them. Woza Albert has a well-balanced approach so you get an experience of the human side of the problem."

The play is a political fantasy, set in the time of the Second Coming. Christ flies in to South Africa only to discover that things are not as he would wish. When he makes his feelings known, the black hail him as a revolutionary leader and the whites in power as a Communist trouble-maker.

Apart from the obvious Biblical parallels, the use of Christ's Second Coming is a reference to the Afrikaners, originally Dutch Protestants who went to South Africa in search of religious freedom, and have since attempted to use the Bible to justify Apartheid. The figure of Christ also has an indirect bearing on the title — Woza Albert, means "rise up Albert". Albert refers to Albert Lithuli, leader of the African National Congress in the 40's and 50's. Lithuli, like Christ, became the symbolic and actual leader of his followers, and also like Christ, he rejected terrorism. He was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his efforts against apartheid and became the world's symbol against institutionalized racism, rather like Nelson Mandela is today. Lithli was a Martin Luther King who had to deal with even greater bigots than those of the American South, and whose dream has yet to be realized.

They said they are dismantling apartheid, but the government with the "mandate for change" has only been in power for two weeks. So how is it that these black South Africans can visit us and perform their anti-government plays?

Roberta Uno Thelwell remembers putting that question to Barney Simon of the multi-racial Market Theater Company of Johannesburg, "His reply was that is was easier for South Africa artists to tour as the government was supposed to be implementing the gradual dismantling of apartheid, and they saw black art touring as a kind of PR exercise. At the same time, there is so much going on politically in South Africa that art is seen as marginal to the main action, so the government doesn't see it as a threat."

Ken Johnson quoted a South African as saying, "I don't want to think about why they let me come and go because they may make me stop."

The cast of Woza Albert, in addition to the performances on Friday September 22nd and Saturday 23rd, will speak to Doris Abramson's Theater of Third World Americans class today between, 1-2:15 p.m., in 134 Hasbrouck.

Long-lost French band, Magma, reissues early works

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Who was Magma and why are they important? Read on.

Valley Jazz

There were a handful of bands that were truly ahead of their time in the late 60s and early 70s, most of them quite obscure: the Velvet Underground and Frank Zappa in America, Soft Machine and Henry Cow in England, and most obscure of all, Magma in France. These bands leap-frogged the "symphonic" and funk cliches of better-known art-rock and jazz-rock outfits, instead incorporating such influences as contemporary classical and free jazz.

Magma also stepped beyond the idea of the concept album: they were a concept band. They invented a sci-fi story to explain their existence, involving a planet called Kobaia to which they supposedly travel on their debut album to escape the iniquities of a future Earth. They even invented a language: as the liner notes to the album put it, "All the songs and vocals are in Kobaian, our own language. The music is sufficiently expressive to enable you to follow the story of the voyage."

This may sound like an even more pretentious verion of Yes or Genesis, yet Magma simply had more going for it musically than any of those bands. Its leader, drummer Christian Vander, studied with Elvin Jones, John Coltrane's drummer. He is also clearly influenced by this native Gypsy folk music as well as Stravinsky, Bartok and other sources unusual for an ostensible rock musician.

The band's 1970 debut contains relatively conventional rock elements. The opening track starts out sounding like Blood, Sweat and Tears, and there is an overemphasis on riffs rather than melodies. However, these aspects coexist with such things as squealing, atonal sax solos a la Albert Ayler. Their second album, 1001 Degrees Centigrade, was transitional; the rock forms got de-emphasized, but they didn't quite hit a compositional stride.

Their peak style began on the incredible third disc, Mekanik Destruktiw Kommandoh. Here, the idea of a rock riff is mutated into a strangely hypnotic Wagnerian zombie storm trooper march. The dense, complex arrangements of brass, reeds and vocal chorus come at you like two moving walls in a closed room. There is no escape — it demands your attention.

Mekanik was to be the third "movement" in a nine-album series called Theusz Hamtaakh (or "The Time of Pain"). On subsequent albums, they dropped the Goetterdaemmerung-like story line, though they kept the invented language. Vander began to hire some virtuoso musicians — as with most such bands, personnel turnover was frequent — and Magma proceeded to record its finest album.

Magma Live is a double-disc set consisting of almost half new material. The energy level these musicians sustained over long compositions, spurred on by Vander's superhuman drumming, is remarkable. Magma's sound has never left much room for self-indulgent soloing, but this time bassist Bernard Paganotti and Coltrane-influenced violinist Didier Lockwood get spectacular workouts. The "live" atmosphere injects new life into a sound that can be leaden and overbearing. This 1975 release is the last of the reissued albums.

For the past decade or so, it has been "politically correct" to repudiate musical developments of the 1970s, particularly in the jazz-rock and art-rock genres. Now, however, some people are starting to re-evaluate them and to mine history for the truly influential artists. Thus, the Velvet Underground has been cited as a major influence by many modern rock bands; Frank Zappa's re-issues of his older material are selling well; a small California label has just issued a 1970 live date by Soft Machine. The Magma re-issues (on Seventh Records) are part of this healthy trend.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Follow your intuition when faced with a crucial financial or business decision. Understatement serves you best when dealing with people who ask too many personal questions. December will find you contemplating a career change. Taking some advanced college courses will increase your earning potential. Romance inspires you to set a wedding date in early summer. Your generous nature makes you take up the cause of the underdog. Do not forget to look out for your own interests.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Restructuring lets you gain certain business advantages. Seek the cooperation of someone behind the scenes. You need to find a solution before someone asks embarrassing questions. Romance blossoms anew.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make certain a plan is cost-effective and you will score major gains with an authority figure. A patient, conciliatory attitude works wonders. You gain financially through newly formed partnerships.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Retain all security measures now in force and financial progress will be strong. Developing trends could cause confusion; seek advice from marketing experts. Pursue inexpensive pastimes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone may be trying to pull off a power play in your office. Watch what you say and do. A marriage or romance undergoes positive changes. Loving couples set the date.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take the intiative and you will find what you are looking for. Swift action serves your long term interests. Do not allow business to intrude at a social affair.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Put two and two together and make good use of the knowledge you extract. Time is fleeting. If money is running short, have a family confab to discuss possible remedies.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be especially alert today so you are not caught offguard. Safety depends on maintaining high standards. Refrain from voicing your views if doing so could offend someone close to your heart.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Allow your partner to provide the incentives or push that will spell success for both of you. Careful planning is in order. Refrain from extravagance; dine quietly at home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Demand value for your money and you will enjoy greater financial security. Take more interest in a teenager's educational plans. Your encouragement is vital for a good parent-child relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan.19): Refrain from forcing an issue or problems will multiply. Daily exercise will help you feel better. Social events and telephone calls could be very lucky today. Dress elegantly for an important date.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Pay attention when a close friend offers you some unusual advice. This may give you a clue as to how to succeed. Partners at the office or at home are full of surprises.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your greatest satisfaction will come through your work. Conditions at home take on added importance. Choose a house or apartment carefully. Sudden travel is a real possibility.

Nothing special about Patriots' kicking game

FOXBORO (AP) — The New England Patriots' special teams have been extra special for their opponents.

Kicking game foulups have led to 24 of the 48 points the Patriots have allowed this season. Just three seasons ago, the kicking game was one reason they reached the Super Bowl.

This year it's a major reason they struggled to win their first game and lost their second.

But Mosi Tatupu, a special teams standout for most of his 12 seasons with the Patriots, says that except for some glaring mistakes, that part of the game is going well.

"We're pretty solid," he said yesterday. "We've been playing well returning kickoffs and covering punts. We've been close to breaking kickoffs a couple of times (for long gains) and the coverage has been solid, too."

But in the Patriots' 27-24 season-opening victory, the New York Jets scored one touchdown on a fake field goal when linebacker Larry McGrew left his area open and another just one play after a blocked punt that occurred when Jim Bowman missed a block on Erik McMillan.

In the Patriots' 24-10 loss last Sunday, Miami scored a touchdown after an incomplete pass by Jeff Feagles on a fake punt and a field goal after a poor snap by Danny Villa forced Feagles into a desperation throw that also fell incomplete.

On Sunday, New England must face Seattle, which was fourth in the AFC last year in average gain on kickoff returns and fifth on punt returns.

Patriots' punt returner Irving Fryar said no major changes have been made on special teams since the loss to Miami.

"I'm not concerned about it," he said. "Ask me again in six weeks."

Tatupu said the 1985 Patriots had the best special teams play since he joined the club.

"We don't have the same guys (playing special teams) we had two or three years ago," Tatupu said. "Rookies are going to be playing on a lot of special teams with veterans. You hope you can get a feel for each other."

Nor do the Patriots have the same special teams coach. Keith Rowen has succeeded Dante Scarnecchia, who left after last season to become an assistant coach with Indianapolis.

"We haven't really changed our philosophy that much," Tatupu said of the coaching change.

UMass' only setback was a 4-1 loss last Sunday to Old Dominion University which is ranked No. 1 (the Bonnies are the defending national champions and are 4-0 this year, so that ranking is probably pretty accurate).

"Providence is in there right now because they're undefeated," Hixon said.

But these polls must have some kind of purpose.

"It can be a motivator," Hixon said. "Some coaches use it that way. If you were ranked below somebody, they might use it as a tool that way.

"They (the rankings) are just a relative idea of who has played who and how they've stacked up."

However, one poll that the Minutewomen may be watching all season is the Northeast regional poll. The top team in the Northeast will be invited to the NCAA tourney at the end of the season. At the present moment, PC has been ranked No. 1 in the Northeast, Northeastern University (2-1-1) No. 2, UMass and UNH (3-1) tied for No. 3, and Boston University (2-1) No. 5.

"It's important that we do well in our region," Hixon said. "It's a very strong region. We have five teams in the Top 20. So we've just got to go after every regional team and slug it out to the end."

Northeastern is ranked No. 6 in the nation. UNH is ranked No. 11 and BU No. 16. Today's game could change all those numbers though. A win for either team would greatly strengthen its position in the region.

UMass and the Friars play contrasting styles. PC's play is totally opposite the Minutewomen's which Hixon says is a passing and finesse game.

"They are very aggressive," Hixon said. "They are a hit and run team. They're a good team and they're nice kids but they're not nice to play against because they are very, very physical."

Which should make for a very interesting game.

"We'll have to hold our ground and be mentally tough not to retaliate against any undue roughness," Hixon said. "I think we're going to have to kind of play their game, too. We're going to have to hit and run.

"Their goaltending is probably their weakest part of their game," Hixon said. "So we're going to shoot like mad people and send everybody into the circle. And we're going to play Providence a little bit of their own game."

So far, the Friars' game has been to run the score up. PC has scored 18 goals in those five games (one of which was a 7-0 rout of the University of Lowell). Junior Cami White leads the Friars with five goals and six assists. Karen Crawchuk has scored four goals and four assists. And the offense is one department where Hixon wants to make some improvements.

"We need some more scoring," Hixon said. "I think that was very clear over the weekend (last weekend when UMass scored just two goals in two games against ODU and James Madison). We're creating a lot of opportunities. We're just not finishing it off. We're really looking to be much more aggressive around the net either by putting more people up there or by finding somewhere in the ranks those people that can do it. It's got to be one or the other. We either change our formation or the people that are up there become more hungry to get it in."

Senior midfielder Kathy DeAngelis leads the Minutewomen with four goals. She has led UMass in scoring for over two years now. In fact, DeAngelis was the leading scorer for a team that beat Providence two years ago in the NCAA tourney to advance to the Final Four. In that game, UMass was the last team selected to play in the 12-team tournament. Providence was ranked No. 3 in the nation on that day.

Which proves that polls are not always right.

There is a certain sense of pride and hurt in tying a scoreless game. It can mean man for man, perhaps you met your match. It can also mean perhaps you had an off day (because it was raining).

"This was just what we needed," said Gettler. "In this game, we were dangerous sometimes. We were able to prove we could get dangerous. Now we need to capitalize on that.

"Our next opponent is Vermont (Saturday) who is probably ranked first in New England and in the top ten nationally," Gettler said. "That will be a great challenge. Once we get dangerous, we'll have to stay that way to beat them."

As for the UMass starting lineup, there is not expected to be any major changes. At this point in the season, the bench has been an important contributor to the team, with substitutions like Kim Eynard and Leanne Swartz.

The netminding position has been especially strong, as Rudy has the confidence that either Mary Curtis or Skye Eddy can do the job, each registering a shutout.

For numbers' sake, Curtis has drawn three starts, compiling a 1-2 record. The senior has a shutout and has let up an average of only one goal per game.

Eddy, the freshman, has two wins against Colgate and Wisconsin and has held opponents to a meager 0.50 goals against average.

Rudy feels that since both goalies are playing so well, he can hold off on choosing on the No. 1 stopper. "We'll keep on alternating until the stage when we have to make a decision," says Rudy.

He feels that key time will come during the last two weekends of the season, when UMass has to play at North Carolina State and William and Mary, then Rutgers and Brown at home to end the season. All are Top 20 teams at the moment.

Big games shouldn't be a surprise to the Reds, as they arguably own the nation's toughest schedule. And Hartford shouldn't be any different.

Radja looks to defend against Jugoplastika

BOSTON (AP) — Dino Radja, whose basketball future could rest on a court decision, wants to join the Boston Celtics as a defendant in a suit by his former Yugoslavian team that wants to keep him.

A US District Court hearing is set for this afternoon on the suit by Jugoplastika. Radja would become a defendant if Judge Duoglas P. Woodlock accepts the motion to intervene, filed Monday.

"I wish the whole thing was over with," said Radja, the Celtics' second-round draft pick this year who has been outspoken in his desire to play for them. "It's making me very nervous."

After the forward signed with the Celtics, Jugoplastika sued, claiming he has a contract with it.

"The NBA told Jugoplastika they want to find a way to make this work out," Radja said. "but I don't think that can happen. Let's see now what the judge will say."

Radja "has an obvious interest on the subject matter of the lawsuit," said Kenneth Berman, Radja's attorney who filed the motion, "and the disposition of that lawsuit could, as a practical matter, impair or impede his ability to protect that interest."

"I have no problem with that," Peter Parcher, an attorney for Jugoplastika, said of Radja's desire to enter the case. "Everyone deserves their turn at bat."

Last Friday, the Celtics field documents, including a deposition by Yugoslavian attorney Vladimir Rubcic, in opposition to the suit.

In the deposition, Rubcic explained why he believes the contract with Jugoplastika is not binding under Yugoslavian law.

Parcher disagreed, saying, "my clear impression remains that the country of Yugoslavia has due process. What they are saying is, things that are perfectly legal in this country are unconstitutional in Yugoslavia.

New Zealand planning to appeal Cup decision

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — New Zealand syndicate chairman Michael Fay said yesterday he will attempt to appeal a New york court decision allowing the San Diego Yacht Club to retain the America's Cup.

"We have always expected this dispute would go all the way to the final court," Fay said. "Mercury Bay is committed to seeing it through and we are going to win."

Fay described the court decision as "a disgrace."

He said Mercury Bay Boating Club's appeal, the final step in the legal process, should be completed within four months and should not interfere with plans to race the next Americas Cup in 1992.

In a 4-1 decision Tuesday, the Appellate Division of the New York State Court declared San Diego the winner of last year's regatta, reversing a lower court verdict that disqualified the US defender and awarded the America's Cup to New Zealand.

"The idea that a competitor can fix a contest to win makes a nonsense of any sport. It is wrong, plain and simple," Fay said.

Justice Bentley Kassal's dissenting opinion maintained that last year's cup races were "manifestly unfair in every sense" because the United States raced a catamaran against New Zealand's monohull.

Fay said the appeals court itself was sharply divided on fundamental issues. "If this ruling is not overturned, sportsmanship and the cup are out the window," he said.

Under New York law, either the Appellate Division or the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, must give Fay permission to appeal. George Tompkins Jr., Fay's lawyer, said the Court of Appeals accepts about 10 percent of the cases it is asked to hear. Fay has 30 days in which to ask for permission to appeal.

Even while the New Zealanders were losing 2-0, they maintained that the contest was invalid, as the deed of gift governing the 138-year-old contest called for the defender to enter a boat that was similar to the challenger's.

"Mercury Bays challenge was right, San Diego's defense was wrong," Fay said.

Men's soccer sloshes to scoreless tie

Minutemen can't get first win vs. Dartmouth

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Adverse weather conditions seem to have adverse effects on a team's ability to play up to par. Not only is the ball slippery, but it's very difficult to maintain footing. Fortunately for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, it was only a minor factor in their game yesterday against Dartmouth College which ended in a scoreless two-overtime game.

"I hate to put the blame on the weather, but our forwards had difficulty because of the wet ball and field," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "We couldn't put three passes together and because of that, it took us longer to control the play."

The game comprised of volleys on both ends of the field but the majority of the action was at midfield. Dartmouth has a penchant for possessing the ball in its backfield. Their backs are agile, quick and as offensively competent as their forwards.

"We weathered their possessions well," said Gettler. "because we remained patient for the most part. We knew not to push the play."

UMass played the better part of its game volleying in the midfield where both the midfielders and backs were forever passing the ball. Chips and headers shortened the playing area while the give-and-go's were inconsistent and often just plain didn't work.

When things didn't work for Big Green, their inclination was to foul. Dartmouth committed the most fouls during the second half of regulation (12), ending the game with 20 fouls total, compared to 6 for UMass.

"Today we saw a real good performance from the defense," Gettler said. "We showed we could hold out, shut down a great offensive attack." Dartmouth outshot UMass, 20-7.

A major component of that awesome defense was freshman goalkeeper Steve Armenti, who made his home debut yesterday. His goaltending was almost exacting. He worked his defense, read the attack like a book and made sound judgment calls. Armenti ended the game with 12 saves. Big Green attributed their 5 saves to sophomore Jesse Bradley.

"Armenti had a great game," said Gettler. "He came out big three times.

"Dartmouth's possessions and shots were harmless," Gettler said. "They never really got dangerous; they never created that situation."

Volleyball team razed by BC; at URI tomorrow

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

As it was with the three little pigs, it is also for the University of Massachusetts volleyball team.

A house made of straw will not hold up against the big bad wolf. Tuesday night the big bad wolf came in the form of the Boston College Eagles who beat the Minutewomen in three straight games, 15-5, 15-5, and 15-9.

UMass still is at the beginning of a rebuilding year and at this juncture it appears that the house is still made of straw. "It's the same old thing", said head coach Carol Ford, "BC is a good team, but not great. We played poorly because of inexperience, but it's not an excuse for how poorly they played."

The Eagles did not need the gale force winds of Hugo to topple the Minutewomen. "The bottom line is that it cannot get any worse," Ford said. The loss comes at a time when it appeared that UMass was making improvements, and the loss should not be taken as a fatal blow to the Minutewomen's season, but they have a weekend tournament coming up in Rhode Island where they will play URI, Providence and Brown. These are all very BIG BAD wolves and the UMass domicile must be fixed up as much as possible.

Rhode Island is currently even at 5-5 and has won three of its last four. The only loss in that string has been at the hands of the University of California-Irvine, a Top 20 team.

Leading the URI attack will be Kengy Gardiner. A sophomore outside hitter, Gardiner leads the team with 142 kills and also 82 digs. Backing up Gardiner on the court will be 6-foot-1 Michelle Drerup. The team captain, Drerup is a senior middle blocker and has 112 kills and 35 blocks.

The youngster in the URI squad is freshman Nergis Agi. Agi, a six-foot middle blocker, leads the team with 39 blocks. That works out to roughly 1.18 blocks a game.

Leading Providence College is captain Debbie Matejka, a junior hitter and has been twice named to the Big East All-Tournament team and was named the 1987 Big East rookie-of-the-year.

The Friars are a young team. Having only one senior, part of Providence's attack is based on the play of freshmen Nanette Beattie (6-0) and Jennifer Winslow. These two rookies will figure to see plenty of playing time.

Brown University, last year's Ivy league champs, may develop to be the most interesting of UMass' opponents. Last year UMass beat Brown in five games and this year Brown will be playing their first games of the season in the tourney.

Brown's major weapon is their size. Their smallest player is 5-9 and from there the Bruins only go up, topping off at 6-2. The player to watch is sophomore Aimee Bower. Bower, the setter, was the Ivy league rookie-of-the-year and was also named to the second team All-Ivy Squad.

Women's soccer heads for Hartford

Reds seek third straight W

Sophomore forward Michele Woodside and the Minutewomen travel to Hartford this afternoon.

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

Before the season started, one might have written off the University of Hartford because of all the biggies on the Massachusetts women's soccer schedule. But all of a sudden, the Lady Hawks have swooped past UMass in both the regional and national rankings.

Hartford (4-1) is ranked ninth nationally by the ISAA, just one spot in front of the Reds (3-2). In New England, Hartford is second (behind Connecticut) and just ahead of UMass, which is third.

"It's become a very big game," said coach Jim Rudy. "We have to beat a team in our region — we've already dropped a game to Vermont."

Rain could make a mess of Hartford's grass field, but the Reds should be used to playing in the muck after a rainy weekend at Cornell last week.

Rudy expects another tough match in the rain at 3:30 today and the Lady Hawks have got a brand new style of play, largely due to new head coach Austin Daniels.

The former assistant at perennial power Colorado College, Daniels has altered the physical, aggressive style of the Lady Hawks in years past.

"He's really changed their outlook," says Rudy. "They're playing quality ball and focusing on playing the game."

So far Daniels has been quite successful, as his team has upset George Mason, beaten Boston College in overtime, and thrashed Stony Brook and Colgate. Hartford's only setback has been William and Mary, the nation's No. 4 team, in a 1-0 loss.

The Lady Hawks' key players include Donna Harnisch, their leading scorer this season, midfielder Karen Schive, freshman Kim Larner, and Karen Romero.

The Reds spent the day off yesterday and otherwise practiced the prior two days indoors. They have been hampered by nagging minor colds which Rudy says shouldn't keep any players out.

Field hockey faces off with Providence

Regional test for UMass

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

If you happen to follow field hockey on this campus, don't take a look at the national rankings every week in the Boston Globe. It may not give you a good indication of that week's game, such as the one today with Providence College (3:30 p.m., Totman Field).

"My own opinion on rankings is they don't mean anything," University of Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon said. "Teams are selected at the end of the season for the NCAA Championship ,not based on polls and not based on the rankings."

For the record though, Providence comes to town today ranked No. 3 in the nation by the NCAA based on its 5-0 record. The Minutewomen, 3-1, are No. 9.

"The rankings are really promotional more than sometimes a real accurate indicator of how good the team is," Hixon said. "That's always been my position. We don't really pay all that much attention [to the rankings]."

Can these rankings be used as a barometer to measure today's match-up, especially in only the first month of the season? Well, PC has not played anyone in the Top 20 though the Friars own a win over the University of Connecticut which traditionally fields a strong team every year.

"As far as actually having any meaning, I think in the first month of the season there is very little comparison to be made," Hixon said.

Black students call administration racist

By SCOTT C. HILL
Collegian Staff

During a heated but orderly meeting, more than 100 Black students filled the Malcolm X Center last night to discuss Black students institutional racism in recent UMass administrative decisions.

Last semester the center had no restrictions on its closing time, but according to a letter issued Sept. 18 by Joseph Zannini, director of Housing Services, the center is to be closed at 1 a.m.

Dean of Students Jo-Ann Thomas Vanin and Dr. Ann Quinley, dean of Academic Support Services, who attended the meeting, offered to keep it open until 3 a.m. The students said the administrators' concessions were not satisfactory.

"Accepting these appeasements is like begging for crumbs," said Rudy Krieger, who gave a history of the Black struggle at UMass. "Its a constant struggle. The things we agree to this year will not be here next."

Theresa Jefferson, treasurer of the Malcolm X Center, said she feels that Housing Services is taking control of the center away from the Black students. "We were lied to," said Jefferson. "Housing claimed to be offering support but what they really meant was control."

To substantiate this point, Yvette Russell, coordinater of the Malcolm X Center, enumerated the changes which Zannini is attempting to force upon the Malcolm X Center "without consulting or even informing the Black student administrators."

They include the following: All activities must be first approved by Housing Services; all social events must end at 3 a.m.; social events can only extend until 3 a.m. if an "adult" (non-student administrator) is present.

The administrators did not say why they were imposing these new restrictions, but the Black community said they believe they were racially motivated.

Russell said Zannini has refused to release keys to the center unless she agrees to these restrictions. She said she has pledged to obtain the keys without accepting these restrictions which are "adverse to the needs of the Black community."

Another issue addressed was what student Tony Walker called "unfair security restrictions" placed upon Black social events. An example discussed was when the Black Mass Communications Project Sept. 15 held its annual Jeans and Tee-Shirt Party.

According to Walker, the Campus Center required BMCP to pay $400 for UMass security, including a metal detector, while two other organizations holding parties the same night in the same building with similar attendance didn't require security.

Walker said he believed this was because of the "paranoia the administration has when dealing with masses of Black people."

The Black students also discussed the allocation of office space in the New Africa House and availability of the Benjamin Banneker Computer Center.

A SURVEY VIEW – Amherst College philosophy graduate Dan Green visits the Peace Pagoda in Leverett.

Air Force letter was 'junk mail,' says Conti

Dr. Samuel Conti, vice chancellor for research and the dean of the graduate school, said at the Faculty Senate meeting yesterday he did see a letter from a United Air Force General. He said the letter was filed with other "junk mail."

"I read my important mail," Conti said. "This is junk mail. I have hundreds of those letters of general correspondence on a general issue. They are all just trivial junk mail."

However, Conti said Wednesday he had never seen a letter from Gen. Lawrence A. Skantze regarding Project Forecast II, a program to improve the Air Force's future war fighting capabilities.

He did reiterate yesterday that he has never heard of the project.

A copy of a letter stamped "Vice Chancellor for Research and Graduate Students" and dated Sept. 8, 1986 appeared in the Collegian yesterday.

Conti said his office staff searched through the office's archives looking for the letter. He said the letter had been filed in his Department of Defense file, but the file was removed from his office last semester during one of the sit-ins protesting military funded research.

Members of People for a Socially Responsible University claim that Conti is involved with the project Gen. Skantze initiated in 1985. They also believe Conti has been working with the Air Force on research projects.

Conti said: "PSRU used the Collegian. PSRU can come up with meaningful issues."

He said investigating whether the University is selling its soul to the DOD or the number of graduate classes which have been cut as a result of the depleted budget are relevant issues.

The letter inaccurately addressed Conti's title, and was not dated by the general.

AHORA aids Hugo victims

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Members of the Latino student organization at the University of Massachusetts are raising money for victims of Hurricane Hugo, which recently tore through Puerto Rico.

Felipe Barreda, president of AHORA, said the group decided to set up a table in the Student Union Lobby after discussing the damage to the island. The money will be given to the Red Cross, he said.

Barreda said many of the 300 Puerto Rican students at UMass have relatives living on the island.

Some members of AHORA have contacted their families, and have been able to get the latest information from them.

Jaime Pales, a freshman from Rio Biedras, a city outside San Juan, said he managed to reach his parents Tuesday morning.

Duffey says no to request for study on further cuts

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey yesterday rejected a request by the state to submit an analysis of additional areas at the University of Massachusetts which may be cut to meet a proposed five percent reduction of funds allocated for fiscal year 1990.

Although he will not submit proposals for reductions in this fiscal year, Duffey said he will prepare before the end of the year a plan for the future financing of the University.

"This campus cannot take another round of budget cuts," Duffey said at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting. "I tried to make that clear."

Duffey said he received a letter this week from L. Edward Lashman, Jr., state secretary of administration and finance. The letter was a copy of a memorandum sent to the department heads and cabinet secretaries of all state agencies last week requesting them to submit this plan by Oct. 15.

In the letter, Lashman said, "disappointing" tax revenues in July and August, which were lower than projected, have forced state administrators to examine the possibility of additional curtailments.

The secretary's office will be submitting a "savings and revenue" package to generate $150 million in savings and revenue this year and $250 million annually thereafter, but Lashman said there is no guarantee the state legislature will approve the plan.

In his reply to Lashman, Duffey acknowledged the severity of the budget crisis, but pointed out that the University has already suffered a loss of some $23 million in state allocations since the cutbacks began two years ago.

"A university is not a state agency," he wrote. "Unlike some of the departments of government we cannot simply lay off facul-

Extra fee looms over UMass

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts could be facing another fee hike this acadimic year, said Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst) in his address to the Faculty Senate yesterday.

Rosenberg said he will fight against the cuts and added, "You just can't do that, particularly in the middle of a school year."

Rosenberg said the $309 fee would be a transfer of costs for services and utilities. He said this service fee is already imposed on other universities in the UMass system.

However, Rosenberg noted that UMass students pay more in fees than the other institutions, and he will to try impress this fact upon the state legislature.

Rosenberg spoke at lengthe on the serious deficit the Massachusetts budget is facing.

"Massachusetts is facing a fiscal and a political crisis," said Rosenberg. The political crisis, he said, has its roots in Gov. Dukakis' presidential candidacy.

"To achieve political miracles, things were done that are suspect," said Rosenberg. As a result, "the people of Massachusetts feel they were deceived for the advance of one political leader," he said.

Rosenberg said the Reagan slogan of "pay less, get more" is now part of the Massachusetts psyche, but that residents will have to be convinced tax increases are in their interests.

"What we have to get out of our heads is that we can get more for less and somebody else should pay the bill," said Rosenberg.

He said 26 other states are raising taxes.

"We're not alone," he said.

Rosenberg said the Massachusetts working class is bear-

Group advocates rights for animals

Thomas A. Edison said, "Non-violence leads to the highest ethics, which is the goal of all evolution. Until we stop harming all other living beings, we are still savages."

Kathy Le May, president of the University of Massachusetts Animal Rights Coalition, said Edison's quote captures one of the group's main philosophies: The way humans treat animals is directly related to the way people treat each other.

"Students have the view that we're just an animal rights group," Le May said. "We're a human rights group too."

"In our minds [animal abuse] is similar to sexism and racism," she said. "Once you can just shoot a deer for game, it's easier to justify hurting humans."

Le May said the animal rights movement has been gaining increasing national interest over the past few years. Membership in the UMass coalition has doubled since last year, she said.

Garreth Matthews, a UMass philosophy professor who taught a course last year on environmental ethics, said one possible reason for this increased awareness is the so-called "animal research paradox."

"[People] have become increasingly interested in finding out about human beings by experimenting on non-human animals," he said.

Matthews said animal experimentation raises two ques-

Experts discuss toxic waste at Hampshire lecture

BY BETH O'TOOLE
Collegian Correspondent

Products used in everyday life, like house paint and aerosol bug spray, create hazardous toxic waste during their production, said Sarah Weinstein, a member of the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection, Tuesday night at Hampshire College.

"The material (hazardous toxic waste) left over after the product is made has no more useful economic life," said Weinstein.

According to Weinstein, a hazardous waste is anything ignitable, corrosive, explosive, or toxic. Hazardous waste has been disposed into the air through exhaust, into ground water through drains and sewers, or discharged into streams, canals and rivers, contaminating our air and ground water, she said.

Also lecturing about "Toxic Waste Clean-Up" were Frank Marino, manager at Wang Laboratories; Corinne Johnson of Arthur D. Little Corp.; and Donald Hickman, a toxic waste specialist.

Hickman said: "Fertilizers, sewage, petroleum, and road salt concentration also contaminate ground water."

Marino showed slides of companies dumping waste into river and emitting exhaust into the air. He also showed slides of the Lowel Mills, the Love Canal landfill and other waste sites in the United States.

"You create many more problems by moving it (the waste site) than by trying to contain it," said Marino.

Contaminated ground water may be cleaned by incineration and air stripping, said Marino. Waste is taken out of the water into the gas state during air stripping and then incineration, he said.

Weinstein said, "In Massachusetts, there is no place to dispose of waste. It must be shipped to a licenced company to treat, store or destroy of waste."

Weinstein said 1,634 waste sites should be investigated and 270 other sites have been already cleaned.

Hickman said companies need to assess risks and maximize health without minimizing the benefit of their product.

"Society is all on the learning curve together," said Marino. "We're getting better but we still have a long way to go."

Johnson, a representative for Arthur D. Little Corp., said companies should think about environmental health and increase regulations concerning waste.

Marino suggested that more information on hazardous toxic waste should be provided in public education, cable TV, and libraries so society will be better educated.

The lecture, sponsored by Hampshire College, was part of a three-week colloquy on Restoring the Earth: Strategies for a Just and Sustainable Future.

DOES SHE HAVE THE RIGHT CLASSROOM? — A student sits waiting for a class to start at Smith College.

For 20 years Boltwood helps mentally retarded

From Staff Reports — Although the Boltwood Project has been in existence 20 years and is one of the most successful programs in the Five College Area, it still remains a small program dedicated to placing student volunteers to help in the Belchertown State School, a facility for mentally retarded persons.

The program was founded in 1969 by Amherst College student Mark Miliotos and 13 other students. They were involved in a bidding war over who would take over a defunct fraternity house. The premise they proposed for the house, which was on Boltwood Avenue, was for public service for the community.

It was a difficult task to begin. "We started the Boltwood Project in the fall and recruited into the winter," Miliotos said. "It was ironic that we could get so many people involved — we had over 500 — yet we couldn't get into Belchertown [State School] because the administration was embarrassed about the conditions."

"It was amazing what was going on in that facility. There would be 40 people on a ward doing nothing with one worker watching them," he said. "It was amazing what society let happen there."

It was not until the local media and other advocates became involved that the Boltwood Project became operational. It was a success from the beginning, according to Miliotos, chiefly because it was a very attractive career path at the time.

Today the program, which has about 200 active students, is funded and operated out of UMass, although it is still open to anyone in the Five College system. It can be taken for one or two credits, though most are involved because they enjoy it, according to Amy Knowles, coordinator for the program and senior English major.

"Some volunteers do the program because they need the credits but most do it because they truly enjoy working with these people," she said.

"Once you work with these people you get an appreciation for their talents," she said. "When I was younger I shied away from them, but now I respect and admire these people."

"Some people are really intimidated with working with the mentally retarded at first," she said. "But an orientation program clears up some of the worries. Also just getting out to Belchertown and working with these people helps ease the way."

Merle Willmann, advisor for the program and assistant department head for landscape architecture and regional planning, emphasized the need for a program such as Boltwood. "I feel very strongly about the

"All of the eastern part of the island has been practically destroyed," Pales said.

He said his home was not damaged by the storm's fierce winds, which reached a speed of 140 mph. However, he said, some of his friends' homes were not spared.

"[On the house of] one of my girlfriends, the windows were protected by wood," Pales said. "But the winds made the windows explode."

Barreda said proceeds from the fund raising, $205.45 as of yesterday, will provide immediate aid through clothing, food, medicine and drinkable water to the victims.

He said the island needs water because the island's water supply became contaminated and there is concern about the possibility of an epidemic spreading there.

The assistance will also help in the reconstruction of the island. Many buildings were destroyed in the storm.

Barreda also said Puerto Rico was not the only island in the Caribbean to suffer Hugo's wrath.

When the hurricane hit Culebra, one of two islands nearest to Puerto Rico, about 80 percent of the residents were left homeless, according to Barredas. In Vieques, the other island, the damage was so extensive its mayor declared it a "ghost island."

Other islands affected by the storm include the U.S. and French Virgin Islands, especially the islands of Guadalupe and Montserrat, Barredas said.

He also said AHORA is planning to work together with other individuals and groups, including a person from the US Virgin Islands, to give short-term and long-term aid to the Caribbean.

The table will continue until Wednesday, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

ty, let client lines grow proportionally longer, and then expect to repair these inconveniences when the budget picture looks brighter."

The University risks losing talented faculty members if further reductions are implemented. He pointed out that the UMass faculty drew more than $55 million in research grants from the government and industry last year.

"Talented researchers, like all talented faculty members, once lost, cannot easily be replaced," he said.

need for leisure and recreation for the mentally retarded. Boltwood fulfills this and gets students into the community."

Some students are involved in Boltwood because of internships but many students use the experience for a background in workiing with the mentally retarded. "Some of the students use this as a preparation for careers in this field when they get out of school," Knowles said.

The program has even helped students complete research while still in school. Jennifer Tausek, a fashion marketing major and a Boltwood supervisor, used her experience in the program to write a paper on the clothing needs for the mentally retarded.

Tausek is also very enthusiastic about the program, "It's just so much fun. It's the only class I look forward to going to. It's too bad it's only once a week."

The Belchertown State School is scheduled to close in three years which concerns many involved in the program and in the community. Dr. Ben Richie, retired UMass exercise science professor and mental retardation advocate, stated his concerns: "It is just such a successful program for both the students and for the residents at Belchertown. When it does close down I hope the program will be as successful in the intermediate care facilities [small residential facilities set up by the state]."

The Boltwood Project is still accepting applications for this semester.

ing an increasingly large share of the tax burden.

"For the first time since the depression, the standard of living of the typical working class person is going down," he said. "[The working class] is hurting."

The state is trying to cut waste, fraud, and abuse in government, he said. He told the faculty members to inform him if they knew of an instance of money going to waste.

"Why do you want only one [instance]?" asked a faculty member.

Provost Richard O'Brien said UMass will need to become "smaller" to retain its level of excellence.

"We must work together to create a small, but still fine, place we can be a part of," said O'Brien.

O'Brien assured the senate there will be no removal of tenured faculty or tenured track faculty, those who are to be considered for tenure, on financial grounds. He said faculty numbers will primarily be reduced by attrition.

No new motions were discussed as the senate adjourned because of time constraints.

MY MAN — President Bush gestures towards Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze during a photo session in the Rose Garden of the White House yesterday prior to a meeting in the White House inside.

Soviets, U.S. to begin discussion on reduction of nuclear missile arsenals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, opening an intensive round of high-level talks, carries today to President Bush still-secret proposals from Moscow that could accelerate reductions in the superpowers' nuclear missile arsenals.

But even before Bush received the message from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the two sides had made significant progress on three fronts; human rights, chemical weapons and breaking the 'Ice Curtain' that has divided Alaskan and Siberian Eskimos for more than 40 years.

Shevardnadze, who arrived Wednesday night at Andrews Air Force Base near Washington, cautioned that the proposals he brought with him contain no surprises.

"Mikhail Gorbachev's letter contains some very important proposals, mostly on arms control and on reducing the military standoff between our two countries," he said through an interpreter.

"And those proposals, I have no doubt, serve to remove most of the obstacles holding up progress and an agreement."

Shevardnadze called for a speeding up of developments in U.S.-Soviet relations.

"We believe that we should not stand still, we should not mark time," he said. "The experience that we have gained thus far permits us to hope that there will be further movements."

The Washington Times reported in today's editions that the Bush administration plans to propose the superpowers abolish restrictions on travel by each other's diplomats, barring them only from traveling to some military facilities.

The FBI opposes the plan on grounds it will vastly complicate its efforts to track Soviet diplomats who may be spying, an unidentified administration official told The Times.

After Shevardnadze's meeting with Bush at the White House, the Soviet foreign minister flies with Secretary of State James A. Baker III to Jackson Hole, Wyo., for talks through Sunday morning.

According to U.S. officials, the Soviets have given assurances that hundreds of Jews who were refused exit permits will be permitted to depart.

The Bush administration had presented lists of more than 500 so-called 'refuseniks.' The Soviet Union replied during meetings at the State Department on Monday and Tuesday that three-quarters of them would be allowed to leave, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

It was not immediately clear if in all instances exit permits would be granted, or if some applicants would be allowed only to travel abroad.

Also, a U.S. official stressed, 'the proof will be in the documents issued."

At separate arms control sessions, meanwhile, the two sides moved closer to an agreement to exchange data on their chemical weapons program and to open stockpiles and plants to inspection by the other side.

TIMES ARE A CHANGIN' — A young man holding a giant wristwatch on his back checks the time at Europe's biggest clock in suburban Cergy-Saint-Christophe yesterday before Sunday's passage to winter.

Gorbachev strengthens party during unstable time in U.S.S.R.

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachv has strengthed his hold on the ruling Communist Party at a time when economic failures and ethnic violence have prompted some to worry openly about the possibility of a coup or civil war.

The Soviet leader on Wednesday retired a quarter of the party's top elite. Three full Politburo members departed, including the last Brezhnev appointee other than Gorbachev, conservative Ukrainian party chief Vladimir V. Shcherbitsky.

Replacing the three are men who hold critical positions for revolutionizing the old Soviet ways of controlling citizens, making law and running the economy.

The new KGB chief, professional intelligence officer Vladimir Kryuchkov, replaced Viktor Chbrikov, an executive of the secretive agency through two decades of harsh repression of dissent.

Economic planning chief Yuri D. Maslyukov was promoted to full membership on the Politburo and a leader in the new legislature, Yevgeny M. Primakov, became a non-voting member.

Cambodians celebrate after Vietnamese troops withdraw

SIEM REAP, CAMBODIA (AP) — Thousands of Cambodians threw Vietnamese troops flowers today as Hanoi began a pledged final withdrawal from an 11-year war against resistance forces its superior firepower could not suppress.

In the government-organized ceremony, vehicles carrying thousands of soldiers bearing rifles rumbled out of this northwestern province after a band played pop music. A commander waved flowers in the lead.

Vietnam says it is conducting a six-day withdrawal of its last 26,000 troops from Siem Reap and several other areas of the country. But opposing guerrilla forces charge that Vietnam is faking the troop movement and actually hiding and disguising its troops.

Vietnam invaded Cambodia on Christmas Day 1978 and within two weeks toppled the fanatical Communist Khmer Rouge regime, installing a pro-Hanoi government in the capital of Phnom Penh.

During its four-year rule, the Khmer Rouge killed hundreds of thousands of Cambodians as it tried at the point of a gun to turn the country into an agrarian commune. It also launched bloody attacks on the Vietnamese border.

Papandreou to appear before court on wiretapping charges

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Parliament agreed Wednesday to send former socialist Premier Andreas Papandreou before a special high court on charges of masterminding a wiretapping network while in office.

The court will be made up of the Supreme Court president and 12 Supreme Court or Appeals Court judges. It will investigate the charges against Papandreou and try him if it finds enough evidence.

The 300-seat Parliament voted for the proposal, 169-2, after a two-day debate. The 124 members of Papandreou's Panhellenic Socialist Movement boycotted the vote.

The lawmakers acted on the recommendation of a 12-member parliamentary committee, which concluded that Papandreou was behind the wiretaps of both political friends and foes from May 1987 to last April.

FATAL BUS CRASH — Firefighters administer CPR to a student pulled from a bus that plunged into a gravel pit filled with water after colliding with a delivery truck in Alton, Texas. yesterday. At least 15 students were killed in the accident in this small town a few miles north of the Texas Mexico border.

Plane skids into river

Two die in aborted takeoff

NEW YORK (AP) — A USAir jet carrying 63 people aborted takeoff and skidded into the East River, killing two people. About 10 people were rescued clinging to driftwood, while others huddled on the wing.

"We just grabbed onto a big piece of wood and held on for dear life," said Tom Newberry, 27, of New York City.

The pilot of the 9-month-old Boeing 737-400 decided to abort takeoff from La Guardia Airport late Wednesday for unknown reasons, authorities said.

"Something happened and he put on the brakes. The plane took a dip and the next thing I knew all hell broke losses," said passenger Larry Martin of New York City, who huddled in blankets with his wife, Valerie.

"People were on top of each other. People were screaming. There was the smell of gas. Everyone was saying "Get out! Get out! Get out!"" he said. The Martins got out, and held fast to driftwood until a police boat plucked them from the water.

Officials said two passengers in the rear of the jet were killed. Forty-five people were taken to the hospital; two were reported in serious condition and a third was in stable condition after a heart attack.

The Coast Guard said overnight that up to six people were missing and divers were sent to look for them. But an airline spokeswoman, Susan Young, said all 57 passengers and six crew members were accounted for as of 8 a.m.

Flight 5050, bound for Charlotte, N.C. originally scheduled for departure at 7;27 p.m., was delayed by heavy rain. But officials said weather was not a factor in the crash.

The plane split into three pieces, its nose perched on pylons about 10 feet above water. The other pieces were partly submerged in 25- to 40-foot-deep water.

"What held it up was a bridge," Mayor Ed Koch said of the front section. "The back section, God held that up."

UMass-Boston office loses $100,000; anonymous tips hint at possible theft

BOSTON (AP) — Investigators converged on the University of Massachusetts Boston campus Thursday to find out how $100,000 reported missing from the Bursar's office disappeared and whether it was stolen.

Meanwhile, state Board of Regents Chairman Paul Tsongas questioned why it took weeks for the missing money to be reported to oversight officials.

Officials from the state auditor's office and from the Board of Regents of Higher Education began filtering through documents to sort out the possible theft. Auditor Joseph DeNucci said he notified the state attorney general and would cooperate with officials from that office as the probe continues.

DeNucci said that his office received and anonymous tip Monday alleging that cash and checks had been stolen from the university. DeNucci refused to specify how much money was involved but officials said Thursday that the figure was believed to be about $100,000.

The bursar's office at the 13,000-student school handles tuition and student fees, as well as loans and grants processed through the financial aid office. The funds reportedly were taken over several weeks, and the unidentified tipster alleged the funds were stolen by a university employee.

Donald Babcock, associate chancellor, said a recent internal audit showed that "some funds might be unaccounted for," and that the university's Department of Public Safety was investigating.

Babcock insisted that appropriate agencies, including the state attorney general and the president of the University of Massachusetts system, were immediately notified of the missing funds. Babcock declined to comment on exactly how much money is believed to be missing.

Tsongas said he has not looked into the case in detail but questioned why it apparently took weeks for university officials to notify the Regents staff. Standard procedure is for the Regents to be notified immediately.

"This is not the kind of thing that one should discover ... in the morning paper," Tsongas said. "In a system this big, things like this are going to happen. The question is the process of trying to minimize these issues."

The state Board of Regents Thursday sent its own three-member team of investigators to UMass to look at the university's books, according to Regents spokesman Terry Zoulas.

DeNucci said UMass officials were cooperating with the investigation.

tions: "If non-human animals are not very much like us, then how can they tell us much about ourselves? And, if they are like us, how can we justify experimenting on them?"

Aaron Rome, a UMass junior civil engineering major, said people are hypocritical about their treatment of animals.

"We have animals as pets, yet we exploit animals for food, entertainment, and clothing," he said.

Le May said the coalition's most recent action involved advocating for support of a referendum question last year which dealt with humane farming practices.

Two farmers from family farms visited the coalition's table on the Campus Center concourse last year to express their concern about the mistreatment of chickens and veal calves on factory farms, she said.

"Farmers put 16 hens in a 10-inch cage," she said. "The hens are also 'debeaked' and 'declawed' so they will not hurt each other."

A pamphlet distributed by the Humane Farming Association of San Francisco, Calif., reads: "To prevent muscle development and speed weight gain, the calves are allowed absolutely no exercise."

Le May said the referendum question called for a more humane treatment of farm animals.

"Even if we're going to eat them, at least we can treat them humanely before we kill them," she said. "You wouldn't beat a person on death row before they reach the electric chair, would you?"

The coalition's current objective is a "Rock for Animal Welfare" concert, scheduled for May 4, 1990.

Le May said they are trying to book 10,000 Maniacs, Howard Jones, and the B-52's, because they all "have a passion for environmental rights."

She said they have already booked environmentalists, The Indigo Girls, and that Jane Wiedlin, former singer for The Go-Go's, may also appear.

Le May said she hopes the concert will make people realize that animals are a large part of our ecosystem.

"Animals are not just for aesthetic beauty," she said. "They have a purpose here, and they deserve to live their lives just as we do."

■ Crash

Stephen Berger, executive director of the Port Authority, which operates the airport, said several people walked away from the crash, and at least one took a taxi home.

Some survivors crawled onto the wing to await rescue. Others - some shoeless - slid out exits into the water. At least one person was cut from the wreckage. "They were hanging from the pier, hanging on the wing, hanging from the front of the plane," said police Lt. Larry Johnston.

The airport reopened this morning after six hours.

The plan was delivered new to USAir in January and had no history of mechanical problems, said Nancy Vaughan, another USAir spokeswoman.

Coast Guard Lt. Tom Blisard said most of the passengers were saved because the water was not cold, the plane went down close to the lighted runway and the impact was not harsh. He said the only problem was a strong current.

David Hawthorne, a CBS News producer who was on the plane, said he moved toward the back and got out onto a wing. "A lot of women and children were screaming that they couldn't swim, they couldn't swim," Hawthorne said.

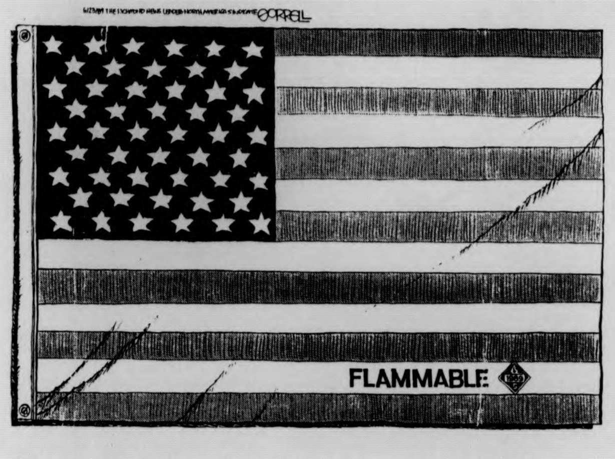
The flag: A fiery symbol of passion



Protection of a unique symbol

The flag of the United States of America is a unique symbol that should be protected from desecration by an amendment to the Constitution. When the Founding fathers of 1777 passed legislation to make the "flag" represent this country, their intent was surely not to see the American flag burned by protestors. From Betsy Ross to Francis Scott Key, the Stars and Stripes was a symbol of freedom, a symbol which people during the Revolutionary War, and all wars, fought for.

I support anyone's right to protest in a peaceful manner. But to burn the flag is a disgrace and a slap in the face to every man and woman who fought for and died protecting this country.

Now, I know that the first defense for all people who would allow the flag to be burned or destroyed would be their right to free speech. But you see, you have your free speech, your cars, your baseball games and the Collegian because of the flag and what it represents.

The flag is a unique symbol of our country. Please don't burn or destroy the American flag. If you feel an issue must be addressed or changed, then get involved in legislation to do just that. But don't dirty your cause by destroying one of the very symbols which allow you to speak out.

Let's keep the Stars and Stripes flying high on the flagpoles of this country with dignity and respect.

Preserving flag's meaning

I think the first conception I had of any flag was from "Schoolhouse Rock" – those three minute efforts on ABC to teach us Grape Ape and Tom & Jerry starved kids a bit of grammar ("conjunction junction, what's your function?") and American history.

Alise Harfield

This particular ditty showed Betsy Ross in a rocking chair sewing a bright, huge cloth as it draped over the arms of the chair and her lap. Her hands worked quite fast, and I was glad because I knew the sooner she'd finish, the quicker my show would come on again.

But she never finished; I don't think so anyway. Because each time she came close, she'd have to alter the stars on her fabric. Her country was growing so much – adding new states that needed representation with a single star. Yet her flag always kept the same 13 red and white stripes for the 13 original colonies.

Around the same age, my brother and I began frequent play of a game called Stratego. The object? To find your opponent's flag on the board without being eradicated by the bombs, soldiers and other plastic pieces that surrounded and protected your own. When the enemy captured your flag, you lost

Flags must have been pretty important; at least, their discovery on a Stratego board was enough for two kids to want to keep playing.

Summers later I played a similar game at day camp, "Capture the Flag." The flag this time was not a plastic replica but a brightly colored torn t-shirt, staked on a wooden pole, and well hidden by each team. If one were caught trying to take it, they would be imprisoned until one of their teammates came to their rescue.

I must have been 12 or so when I realized flags are more than a cartoon on TV, a piece of plastic or a torn t-shirt.

My first principal at elementary school died one year, unexpectedly. The flag, outside my classroom, that I watched crinkle and un-crinkle itself so high in the sky was brought down to half-mast. We ten-year-olds asked why when we got off the school bus that morning.

"We lower the flag in honor of someone dear who's passed on."

In middle school every student took his or her turn on the public address system leading the rest of us, right hands over our hearts, in the Pledge of Allegiance.

"I pledge allegiance to the Flag, of the United States of America . . . "

On the way to our favorite family beach, Nantasket, my family and I drove by cemeteries that had small flapping flags in the place of headstones. I asked my father why.

"They must have fought in the war for this country."

So the flag had respect for my principal, for people who died fighting for their country. It marked "American" on their graves. And we people had respect for it – On July 4th, when we brought it outside. At sports events, when we stood and sang to it. And in my classrooms, every time I held my right hand over my heart . . . " . . . And to the republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Last December I watched "Schoolhouse Rock" on Saturday morning with my nephew, three years old.

In July I heard it was legal to burn the American flag.

If I learned that at age three, today my thoughts would be a lot different.

Is our liberty blowing in the wind?

"I pledge allegiance to the flag. . ."

What exactly do these words mean?

Are they not merely a string of words which children drone in the early morning school hours across America, to a red, white, and blue piece of fabric hanging in the corner of the classroom?

Kim Brater

To most people the flag symbolizes what our country stands for – freedom and democracy.

Alas, most people are also hypocrites, taking out these dusty, faded fabrics on Memorial Day, Flag Day, and Independence Day, to hang over their garages.

Today America is not one which sings in patriotism daily, rather only in times of loneliness, in times of excuse, in times of remembrance, and in times of war. The First Amendment states, "Congress shall make no law. . . abridging the freedom of speech. . ."

These words are carved into stone.

Their meanings are blowing in the wind.

What did our Founding fathers have in mind when they wrote "freedom of speech?"

Did they intend this freedom to be verbatim only?

Writing?

Or actions as well?

Interpreters of the Constitution have been grappling with this question.

Some agree that there should be no absolute freedom of speech, but how then do we determine how far we can push before crossing the line?

Desecration of the flag has been shunned because the flag is supposed to be this omnipotent presence of liberty.

But then why are many foreigners turned away from our country? They are told that the "melting pot" is boiling over and Lady Liberty has blown her torch.

Is this liberty?

Burning the flag, is like burning our history – a history which is based on the right of expression.

I do not think I would flick my Bic to toast marshmallows, however the right to expression is intertwined and woven into the very fabric of red, white, and blue, even if that expression involves burning the flag.

By taking away this right, more harm will be done to the structure of America than any single match lit to the flag.

Erase expression and we will wipe out the true meaning of America.

. . .with liberty and justice for all.

Dictating narrow and dangerous precedents

The fundamental basis of this debate is not the confrontation between the flag wavers and flag burners. It must be decided whether or not to criminalize free political and artistic expression in the form of flag desecration. This proposed amendment would be the first designed solely to restrict free speech that is guaranteed in the Bill of Rights.

The proposed amendment which reads: "The Congress and the states shall have the power to prohibit the act of the desecration of the flag of the United States and to set criminal penalties for the act" (Jan. 22, 1989 H.J. res 305) will set a very dangerous precedent. It narrows and dictates the acceptable bounds of criticism, protest and even artistic expression.

The need to stand up against leftist criminals

It is, of course, up to you to decide whether you love your country, not others. Open your eyes to the real world and see how better the American way is in comparison to the Soviet Union.

Why burn? Be a real American!

The controversial issue over flag burning poses only two real questions to each individual citizen within the United States. Do you want to be anti-American and desecrate everything this flag represents, or would you rather stand up for the colors of our nation and suppress these leftist criminals?

Republican Club

Playing with fire?

Due to the enormous amount of response to this issue, the Editorial Desk was not able to print every submission in full. We have included some of the points expressed:

"What about the homeless? Maybe we should give them all flags so they can use them as blankets of kindling."

Jay Brida
Central

"An amendment prohibiting burning of the American flag is an affront on the basic liberties which the Constitution embodies and is a grotesque display of political opportunism by the Republicans as well as many Democrats."

W. Matthew Whiting
Southwest

"In an age where pacifying rhetoric is mainstream news it is not surprising that the major issues of the last election were the flag and the Pledge of Allegiance . . . Even though it is legal to desecrate the American flag, it is unoriginal and doesn't get you very far."

Dan Bouchard
Amherst

"Those who scream loudest about what our flag represents seem to have the most difficulty demonstrating that to me, mainly because they are the ones who least care. They burn our Bill of Rights to save their flag, and then tell us how lucky we must be that our flag was saved from it."

Owen Broadhurst
Orchard Hill

"When a person claims the Constitution guarantees their right to burn the flag, this seems to me a bit hypocritical, since they are relying on the same system they are trying to destroy. . . Burning of the flag is a call for insurrection, and the destruction of our government, and this must be dealt with accordingly."

Jeffrey Turco
Sylvan

"I was taught that our laws were designed to establish and maintain a harmonious environment in which citizens of our society can peacefully co-exist, without fear of government intervention."

Keith B. Stier
